What's the best racquet in the game? Which racquet is recommended most? In an August 1977 survey by Western Union, court managers, pros, and racquet buyers at over 200 court facilities nationwide picked Ektelon by more than two to one.

Ektelon... the most recommended racquet in racquetball.

Here's why:

Unique Handle Construction
Ektelon racquet handles are virtually indestructible, yet lightweight. The aluminum frame extends all the way through the handle and is tapered at the end to maintain correct racquet balance. A locking pin secures the handle to the frame.

Ektelon offers the broadest selection of handle sizes and grip materials available.

Made of Alcoa 7005 aluminum: Light, tough, 32% stronger than the materials most other racquet makers use.

Frame is drilled after bending, to eliminate stress points, tighten eyelet fit, lengthen string life.

Full year racquet warranty, 90-day string warranty.

Exclusive Patented Milling Process
Ektelon "mills out" a strip of metal from the racquet head to help control weight, flexibility, weight distribution (balance point) and at the same time reduce vibration.

Wood Floors.

Give a lifetime of performance and wearability, because they are more than skin deep.

Wood floors... unlike thin, synthetic type floors... are constructed of sufficient mass to control the transmission of cold and condensation from a concrete subfloor to the playing surface. A most important construction consideration in the building of Racquetball/Handball Courts.

Robbins, now offers a choice of four, hardwood maple floor systems. The superb construction of each of these floor systems make them less affected by variations in temperature and/or humidity... resisting warping, twisting, excessive swelling and shrinkage. Your assurance in having a wood floor system that will last the "lifetime" of your courts, with a minimum of maintenance.

For the player, Robbins wood floors give fast action... with uniform ball bounce as the ball comes off the floor without loss of energy. Furthermore, the high resiliency of Robbins wood floors reduces player fatigue.

With Robbins, the name in hard maple floors, there is a choice... Lock-Tite; Strip-Tite; Permacushion; Cincinnati Sectionals. For Complete details and specifications just write, or give us a call.

LOCK-TITE®
High quality steel channels and clip fastening system to withstand the extremes of moisture and humidity.

STRIP-TITE®

In February we sponsored our First National Masters Invitational and it was quite a success. Coming at a time when we are making significant progress, it should be noted that the USRA is now giving all age categories tournaments so they can enjoy the lifetime sport for their entire lifetime. We are adding Women Seniors (age 35 and up) and Men Super Masters (age 65 and up). The Women Seniors and Super Masters will officially become brackets of play in the 1978 Nationals.

As you know, we already have categories for Senior Men (age 35 and up), Master Men (age 45 and up) and Golden Master Men (age 55 and up). It should be apparent that we are making giant strides to serve “kids” of all ages. Thus we prove our claim that racquetball is a lifetime sport with categories for the big kids as well as the little kids. And no one will ever convince me that every player is not really a kid at heart.

We are called upon to do many things besides sponsor tournaments. Following are two typical examples.

The first is from Wesley B. Bartholomaus of the Skyline School in Portland, OR.

“It is my good fortune to be an elementary school principal. Three hundred students in grades K-8 attend this rather rural school. We are at least 10 miles to a gymnasium facility that offers racquetball. I have attempted in a meager way to provide the upper grade students with an opportunity to play racquetball. We moved some physical education equipment that was mounted on one wall. We now have one front wall and one side wall that are almost regulation size. Two ping pong table tops are placed on their sides to form another partial wall. No back wall is available. The students take turns using my three racquets. They exhibit a genuine interest in this new game in our improvised court. Our problem is to allow more participation because so many children are interested in playing. But I want to thank you so much for your work and, most of all, for an opportunity to read about you and your wife who have made this world a better place for so many people.”

Mr. Bartholomaus asked for nothing in his letter, so it must have come as a big surprise when he received a substantial amount of equipment for his kids . . . compliments of USRA.

Then we heard from Jim Stevens, newly elected National Chairman of the A.A.U. for Handball/Racquetball.

“In recognition of, and tribute to, your personal status and esteem in the heritage of these sports, and in consonance with our administrative organizational structure, I am hopeful that you will accept my invitation and appointment to serve on our Handball/Racquetball Committee’s National Advisory council. I am also desirous of arranging an executive level meeting with you in the near future to review our national program objectives, and determine how we may mutually accommodate the multiple program challenges of two of America’s most popular and beneficial socio-recreational and competitive sports, handball and racquetball.”

Having once served as National A.A.U. Chairman, I know that Jim will need a lot of help. So does the Y and the JCC. We have that help, and it’s available to one and all. We have run hundreds of tournaments for the Y and the A.A.U.

We stand ready to run more. But whatever contribution we make will be structured through our association and will shed its glory alike on both groups.

I therefore replied, “Anything that contributes to the prosperity of handball and racquetball will always have my wholehearted blessing. As I recall, this has been my philosophy since 1927 when I first realized all the possibilities of the little round ball.

“Unfortunately, this labor of love has laid a heavy hand on me. Struggling through nearly 200 tournaments each year has not only turned my hair pure white, it has denied my family and business companionship and concern that a rational man wants to give.

“Because of these continuing pressures, I must decline any further duties, at least until I can delegate some of my current undertakings. Feel assured, however, that I will fully cooperate with you as I always have with the Y, the JCC, and any other organization regardless of their competitive stance. After all, we are all working for the same boss . . . those wonderful American kids we all love.

By the way, how many do you have? Put me down for seven!”

I hope you particularly noted the closing line. When it’s all said and done, what difference does it make . . . USRA, YMCA, AAU, or JCC . . . we are all working for the same boss . . . those wonderful American kids we all love.

By the way, how many do you have? Put me down for seven!

About The All-American Kid . . .
NOT ALL RACQUETBALLS ARE CREATED EQUAL.

Some are rounder than others. At Seamco, we inject superheated rubber into our molds. This gives us a uniform wall thickness and a super round ball.

Technically, our racquetballs are within seventeen one thousandths of perfect roundness. Our next closest competitor is "out of round" more than twice that figure.

Being the racquetball originator, no one has greater technical expertise to give you a better playing ball.

Gals’ Future
All Roses

There were doubters. There were skeptics. Even the players themselves weren’t sure what would happen. But when the first women-only pro tour stop came to a conclusion Jan. 22 only one inference could be made: the gals are here to stay.

Long a poor second cousin to the harder hitting and more flamboyant men on the Colgate-Seamco-Leach tour, the gals finally had a chance to prove themselves. But they alone could not have accomplished the tremendous event in Omaha, NE, that weekend.

It took a superb effort on a number of counts, but it all started with the pros. If courtesy, helpfulness and general attitude toward other players, fans and host staff can be measured in good will, the women pros did more public relations work in one weekend than some of their male counterparts will do in their entire careers.

Besides that the level of play on the ladies tour has improved drastically over the past year. Where there were Steding, Wright and who knows just 12 months ago, there now stand 10 or 12 players who are a threat to go all the way at any time.

The concept behind a women-only tour stop (there was another one the first weekend of April) is basic: there will never be a substantial amount of prize money on the ladies tour unless the ladies can make it on their own. They must be able to play excellent racquetball, provide exciting matches, draw good galleries, and make a stop profitable for a host in order to attract a sponsor who will make it profitable for them.

This is not only crucial for their own financial futures, it is crucial for the promotion of women’s racquetball in every sector, for the further promotion women’s racquetball gets with the pros, the more attention and promotion the gals will get for the entire sport.

But going into the event at Sports Courts of Omaha, many of the gals were hesitant. After four years of the cozy security of the men, some weren’t sure that they alone could bring in the gallery. The doubters were wrong.

Everything possible was accomplished from press parties, clinics and publicity to kill shots, passes and ceiling balls. One hundred percent cooperation was given by the players for the good of the tournament, which sported full galleries and superb matches throughout.

Sports Courts owner Dick Kincade, the USRA’s Nebraska state cochairman, whose belief in the ladies game provided an outstanding host club, did more than his share in hospitality and congeniality.

Many of the pros brought their mothers to this first time event, just to give mom a chance to see her baby in action - racquetball action. Each mother received an orchid and the comraderie between players and moms was just another special something in this special tournament.

Many people have to do many things to insure the success of a major racquetball tournament - especially a pro event. Matt Helfreich, representing our public relations firm of Stuart Rowlands and Associates, did one of the finest p.r. jobs in racquetball history, as the players were literally lined up for media coverage.

Every woman player gave of herself to the future success of women’s racquetball. There was a job that needed to get done and they did it.

But I left Omaha feeling certain that the job would have been done, even if there was nothing at stake, because that’s the way these players are.

If the Omaha women-only pro tour stop is any indication of what lies ahead for the ladies, I will guarantee you two things. First it won’t be long before the women decide that they don’t particularly care for distant cousin status, and second somebody big is going to come along and polish this diamond in the rough.

And it won’t be a moment too soon. For if there is one sector of racquetball that is more deserving, I sure don’t know what it is.

My hat is off to the women pros, they are true professionals in every sense of the word. •

After the serve comes the serve return. The proper position for return of service is about four feet from the backwall and midway between the sidewalls or slightly to the left of midpoint (for right handers). See figure 1. Get into a comfortable tennis receiving stance with racquet ready at navel height in front of your body, knees slightly bent and eyes riveted on the server. Do not tense up in this stance because, unlike tennis, the racquetball serve isn’t as formidable because it hits a wall before coming at you.

Realize this: the instant you receive service, you are in the worst court position possible — in deep rear court, probably on your backhand side. And at that same instant, your serving opponent is in the best strategic position possible — the epicenter of center court. Examine figure 2. Obviously, if you make an error now, it’s gloom and doom time; you’ll not have another chance. Therefore your first objective is to return the ball so that it forces your rival out of the coveted center court station. Do this, usually with a defensive shot.

On the other hand if the serve is a weak one, then by all means administer a more offensive return. A good rule of thumb on service return is to send back any serve that may be taken above the knees with a defensive shot. Return any serve that may be taken below the knees with an offensive shot (pass or kill). Note that most shots rebounding off the back wall are below the knees if you allow them to drop, so return these offensively.
There are five possible service returns. Three are defensive and two offensive. Use the three defensive ones to return a good serve. These include the Z ball, around-the-wall ball and ceiling ball. The Z ball is a rather exotic shot that finds infrequent use on the service return because the court position from which the shot would have to be hit is too deep. See figure 3. The around-the-wall ball is satisfactory now and then as a change up or against an uncoordinated novice, but is relatively risky. See figure 4.

Ceiling Ball Safest

That leaves the ceiling ball, the safest and most logical service return of all. Direct your ceiling returns to the server's backhand, as in figure 5. The ceiling may be used to return any serve, from the garbage to the Z to the booming drive. Prove to yourself the effectiveness of the ceiling return in your next practice game by returning every serve (weak or strong) to the ceiling.

Next to the ceiling ball the pass shot is the most widely employed service return. The pass is more offensively geared than the steady ceiling play, yet is less offensively oriented than the risky kill attempt. You can drive (pass) returns cross-court or down the backhand line. The pass return uproots the server from center court in a manner which usually results in (1) an immediate point or (2) a feeble return.

Should you drive return cross-court or down-the-backhand line? The more effective of these two is the down-the-liner, but it is also the more difficult to control. True, the cross-court drive return goes to the opponents...
The cross court drive may be used to rebuff any serve you can take at knee height or lower. When passing an opponent's forehand, due to his longer reach on that side, aim for a wide angle pass which contacts the side wall just deep of the short line. Compare to figure 7.

Figure 8. You may logically attempt to kill any serve which (1) comes off the back wall or (2) comes off the side wall short of the shaded area. Note that if you choose to kill your return, most attempts should go down the line rather than cross court.

Figure 9. As in chess whoever controls the center court (circle) wins the game. Follow up your service return stroke by advancing to center court. If your return was well-placed, you may stand ready on the outer fringe of the circle. If it wasn't well placed, move closer to the center of the circle depending on where you anticipate the next shot will go.

Scurry to center

Your work has only begun with the proper choice and execution of service return. Whether your return is offensive or defensive, well-placed or not, scurry immediately into center court position, just as the adept basketball player follows in each of his shots. See figure 9. One exception: If your return is a ceiling ball which you think is well placed, it is unnecessary to assume a precise center court station. Instead, move forward a couple of steps to the outer fringe of center court and keep your eye on your opponent.

Practice! Automatically practice the serve returns every time you drill on the defensive and offensive shots. Remember too, that the major points of consideration in self-analyzing one's game include the serve and serve return. If you feel you are losing games specifically due to poor service returns, spend time in the court alone working on the ceiling ball.

The ultimate way to practice service returns is to dig up someone of comparable ability who wants to work on his serves. This, of course, is also the ultimate way for the other guy to practice serves. He serves, you return, and the ball is caught without perpetuating the rally. Repeat, repeat . . .
Point of contact with the ball is a much debated subject. Since everyone cannot stroke the ball with the force of Marty Hogan or the control of Charlie Brumfield, let's concentrate on how most successful amateur players get good results.

Many beginners are simply too anxious to hit the ball and therefore make the mistake of hurrying their shot. Remember that whenever you can wait until the last possible moment to make contact. The longer you wait, the more likely your opponent is to commit himself, thus giving you the advantage during the rally. This ability will improve over time if you will just keep it in mind. As your stroke skill improves, so will your power to maneuver your opponent.

Note in figures 1, 2, and 3 that John Lynch is striking the ball well to the rear of his body. Whenever possible this should be avoided by the novice player. It is quite difficult to direct the ball to where you want it to go if you swing too early. The ball will often just carry weakly around the walls and wind up in center court ready to be plastered by your opponent.
Figures 4-6. When the point of contact with the ball is well in front of the center of the body, just in front of the lead foot, the ball will be struck low to the floor and allow the player plenty of room to take a full swing. This will cause the ball to stay low for a difficult return by the opponent.

In the next sequence, figures 4, 5 and 6, note how the player contacts the ball well in front of his body. The point of contact is roughly even to the lead foot on the forehand stroke. When this method is followed, the player can generally see his opponent and the front wall, which is where he is directing his shot.

The same basics hold true especially on the backhand stroke, where errors are the most common. The body must literally unwind while executing the backhand. To allow this to happen the ball must be struck in front of the player’s body with plenty of room to swing.
Figures 7-9. If the point of contact with the ball is too far to the rear of the center of the body, the ball will be struck too early resulting in a shot that hits the side wall too soon and a weak return.

Figures 10-13. John Lynch's wide stance allows him to lower his hips and get down on the ball. Note that the ball is in front of the lead foot, the racquet is well back prior to the swing and the entire stroke is smooth and forceful.
In figures 7, 8 and 9 the incorrect point of contact is depicted. As in the forehand if the ball is struck too far to the rear of the player's swing, the ball will probably strike the side wall and fall weakly into midcourt. The rest of the swing and execution is good in this sequence.

Figures 10, 11, 12 and 13 indicate a powerful well-executed backhand stroke. Note the various features of this sequence. There is a wide stance of the feet indicating that the player was set well in advance of the stroke. The racquet is well back and the wrist is cocked and the ball has dropped very low. As the hips rotate adding power the weight transfers from back foot to lead foot and there is ample follow through.

Other common errors in point of contact relate to stroking the ball as it rebounds out of the back corners during a rally. Any time a player gets too close to the corner, he limits the range of motion on his stroke, thereby weakening the velocity of his swing.

Figures 14-15. Getting too close to the back wall and deep court corner causes jamming of the stroke and often a mis-hit shot. Note how the player has to shorten his swing because he is so close to the wall, throwing him off balance. Note also he has not allowed himself enough room for his feet to set up.

Do not jam your swing as the player does in Figures 14 and 15. Overrunning the ball will keep you continually off balance and inhibit your swing, as well as place you even further away from center court position.
Correctly, in Figures 16, 17, and 18 the player demonstrates the proper distance one should stay away from the side wall, both with the racquet and the feet. Notice how freely one can then swing at the ball and how easily the entire body can rotate. Obstruction with the side or back wall is thus eliminated and chances for a strong return are greatly increased.
Figure 19. If you overrun the ball you will crowd your shot in the deep backhand corner. The radius of your swing will be decreased, causing a weak or mis-hit return, especially if your racquet strikes the side wall.

The same basics hold true for retrieval of backhand shots out of the corner. In Figure 19 the player has overrun the ball and crimps his swing. The radius of the swing is then decreased and a loss of power results. Correction is made in Figures 20 and 21 when the ball is kept at arm's length and returned effectively with a full swing.

In conclusion it can be stated that proper mechanics, including point of contact, should be utilized. They will increase your efficiency on the court. Often the ball must be returned any way possible, but in most cases it is best to try for the proper point of contact, as demonstrated here.

Figures 20-21. If the proper arm's length distance is kept from the wall a good retrieve will turn into an effective return. To do so the player must have this full and unobstructed stroke.

Doubles For Players Who Know What They’re Doing

by Steve Strandemo

Doubles is a game that’s growing in popularity as court space becomes limited in certain clubs and as more players learn the fundamentals of proper strategy and etiquette. There are a number of reasons for the game’s appeal:

- There’s the camaraderie of four people getting together and playing a match, with the joking and friendly competition that usually results.
- Since you have to protect only one side of the court, you don’t need the conditioning that a full hour of singles would require.
- If you have trouble playing singles because of a feeble backhand, you can protect yourself by playing the right side of the court, where you can hit forehands nearly the entire match. All you need is a partner with a decent backhand to cover the left side.
- There’s the challenge of having to execute your shots much more accurately than in singles, since you have two opponents covering the ball — on the same-sized court.
- The action in center court is usually faster than in singles, thus resulting in even more of a “reflex” game. This is good practice for the quick, open-stance swing you need in singles.
- Doubles is a thinking person’s game. A team that can play together efficiently can often overcome and defeat a team that has brute strength or greater individual skills. A great singles player, in fact, can often be a terrible doubles player.

These virtues of the game, however, lead to one warning for beginners: wait until you have a good grasp of singles before tackling doubles. The action is so fast, with four players swinging four racquets in such a small area, that the game can be absolutely confusing and even physically dangerous unless all four players know what they’re doing. It takes just one person in the foursome who doesn’t understand the basic movements and etiquette to cause a great deal of chaos.

Etiquette

Just as in singles respect for one another is mandatory if you want your rallies to run smoothly and result in fun play. If you’re not prepared to give your opponents an unobstructed swing at the ball and their rightful shots, there should be a doctor on call.

In basic rally situations each team must strive to give its opponents open hitting lanes for the following three shots: (a) a straight-in kill, (b) a pinch into the nearest front corner, (c) the proper cross-court angle.

The nature of doubles emphasizes the short, efficient swing that you have hopefully acquired in singles play. This swing is safer and much more effective in center-court exchanges, where three players are normally positioned close together. In deep court, however, there’s usually enough room to take a full-body swing.
The Basic Formations

Side-by-Side

This is the most logical formation and the most efficient way to play doubles. Each player has basic responsibilities on his half of the court, with the understanding that whenever he gets out of position, his teammate will shift and cover his area.

True side-by-side is best executed when one player is left handed and the other right handed. This allows the team to cover the major passing and scoring lanes with crunching forehands. They then only have to decide who should cover shots down the middle, and that will obviously be the person with the stronger backhand.

Modified Side-by-Side

Since there are relatively few lefty-righty teams the modified side-by-side formation will most often be used when two right handers are teammates. The right side player's major responsibility is to cover the right front corner, where most points are scored. The player with the stronger backhand will hold down the left side.

This formation enables a team with two right handers to account for the fact that the left side is being covered by a backhand, which rarely holds the same offensive potential as the forehand. Therefore, the left side player generally lags a little deeper to protect his backhand. This sets up a diagonal coverage pattern and takes into consideration the strengths of both players.

The “I” Formation

This approach capitalizes on the specific assets of each member by having one player up and the other player back. The front player is quicker, has more aggressiveness in court coverage, and is a better retriever. The person in back shoots the ball better from deep court and has good control of his ceiling game.

Thus each player has the maximum amount of room in which to operate and execute his skills. The retriever is in the center court alone, so he has a full range of potential kill opportunities. His teammate can float from side to side in deep court, covering well placed passes and controlling the ceiling game.

The difficulty is in finding two players who have these qualities, and to then get them together as a doubles team.

Figure 4. Team A-B is playing team C-D. Against a right-handed team, A will try to serve the ball into area 3, because that is D's backhand corner. By standing in the middle, the server has all the proper hitting angles to direct the ball to both back corners. Player B must stay in the service zone with his back to the wall until the served ball passes the back service line. Players C and D share the back court and are located 2 steps off the back wall.

Figure 5. If team C-D is a right-handed-left-handed combination (as in the photograph), the server should learn to angle the ball into alley 2, since that forces backhand returns from either opponent. A good server is thus one who can serve into alleys 1, 2, and 3 with diversification and accuracy. Since control of the serve is more important than force, the server may hit with three-quarters speed until good direction is consistently achieved.
The Basic Shots

The Serve
Proper serving is necessary to get good doubles started. Serve from the middle of the service zone and aim for the back corners, using the same front-wall targets as in singles. Accuracy on your serve is more important than power. But, again, remember: this is a game in which we'd like to master both.

Be careful not to serve low drives or half-lobs into the back corner behind your partner. The timing of your opponent's return down this side wall will usually result in welts on the back side of your teammate as he relocates. Z serves and high lobs into that back corner will take away this worry.

The Serve Return
This is dependent on the success of your opponent's serve. If he serves weakly, make an aggressive return by attempting to kill the ball or drive it cross-court. It's advantageous to widen the angle on your cross-court pass so that it has a greater chance of going by your opponent. (Have it hit the side wall just behind where your opponent is standing.) You should also try to volley and drive any lob serves, since this will get you closer to the center-court position.

On excellent serves go to the ceiling. If you try to hit an unreasonable offensive return, it may float up weakly to the front wall, where both your opponents will be ready to pounce on it.

A relocates after serving, turns to watch D hit the ball, and anticipates D's cross court pass. A will also have to retreat and cover D's ceiling ball if he angles it into the deep right corner.
C moves up slightly behind A and B and is ready to cover their next shot. (One common myth of racquetball doubles is that one team plays completely up and the other team plays completely back. But as these photographs show both teams are always jockeying for the best possible position. This means that one member of the team is always trying to be located in center court, or slightly behind, if both members of the team are deep together, they are going to lose.)
Figure 7. If D's return comes to B, then B's shot options are: (1) kill the ball into the left corner, which can also result in a pass down the left wall; (2) cross court the ball past C. Meanwhile, D has moved up after hitting so that he's ready to cover B's shot. C has also moved up to her team's right side coverage position. A has given C this rightful position (C must be given room to hit B's cross court pass attempt), but A will be ready to move in and cover C or D's next shot. Notice how all team members are watching the ball so they all know what's going on.

Figure 8. If D's return goes to A, her shot options are: (1) kill the ball into the right corner or drive it down the right wall; (2) cross court the ball by D. Note that D has moved up into his rightful position to cover A's cross court attempt. B must move back out of the way, but is ready to return to the front to cover after team C-D shoots. C has moved into her coverage position in the middle and will cover the kill attempt into the right corner or the pass down the right wall.
The Pinch Shot

This is a game in which you have to kill the ball to score the majority of your points because you have opponents placed on both sides of the court to track down your passing shot.

The pinch shot is a particularly valuable scoring weapon, because you often find one of your opponents lagging back a bit, playing defensively, or looking for the cross-court pass. Pinching the ball into the open front court area will thus be very effective. If this opponent starts to cheat too far forward to cover the pinch, then he's highly vulnerable to the wide-angled pass.

Through your doubles experience you'll find that your opponent on the opposite side of the court can't cover both your cross-court pass and your side wall, front wall pinch. So mix these shots up and keep your opponents in a quandary.

The Volley

Just as in singles, the volley should be used extensively in doubles because it will allow your team to hold a center court position. (Remember the general rule: if the ball comes at waist level or below, cut it off on one bounce or volley it; if it comes higher than that, take it off the back wall.)

By volleying from center court — in front of your opponents — you will have a greater offensive shot selection, and since your opponents are not in their optimum coverage positions, a ball killed a little higher than normal has a good chance of going for a winner.

Conversely, when you let a hard driven ball go by at waist level or below, then your opponents can return to their ideal defensive positions as you retreat towards the back wall. You will be forced to virtually "roll-out" your kill attempt.

Figure 9. If the serve goes to C in the right alley, then just reverse the service return options, and reverse the responsibilities of A, B, and D. Once again B must be ready to retreat into the back left corner for a ceiling ball.
The Overhead Drive and Kill
Both of these shots can be used effectively in doubles. If you find an opponent lagging back, use the overhead kill to try to end the rally or to force him forward. If you find an opponent a little too far forward, use the overhead drive to force the ball to bounce up into his chest area for a difficult return.

The Ceiling Ball
Doubles can sometimes turn into long ceiling ball rallies. If your team doesn’t want to play that type of deliberate game, you must change the pace with an overhead kill or an overhead drive. And any time an opponent’s ceiling ball comes up short, or goes long off the back wall, be ready to set up for a kill attempt or passing shot.

The Importance Of Center Court
Center court control is a must for winning doubles.
First if your team is in the center court, you are in a better position to cover your opponent’s different scoring attempts.
Second you are shooting from closer to the front wall and should be more accurate with your shots.
Third it’s much easier to see the ball if you’re standing in front of opponents.
Fourth you can use a wider variety of kills and pinches into the front wall because you don’t have to shoot around other players.

Communication
Good communication is mandatory if your team hopes to maximize its ability. This communication should start before the match begins and should carry through to a critique of the completed match. The pregame discussion should include the tactics you’ll be using in your coverage, your offensive and defensive shots, and the types of serves that will be effective against your opponents. Don’t be closed-minded. Reverse your thinking and try to answer these same questions about your own team so that you might anticipate your opponents’ attack. Also decide on the verbal signals (i.e., “yours, mine”) you’ll give each other on questionable balls that come between you.

Each team is allowed three time-outs a game (30 to 60 seconds long) and you should use this time not just to towel off and catch your breath, but to talk strategy. The team that makes sensible adjustments during timeouts — such as by changing its shot selection — can often slow the other team’s momentum and gain the offensive. There’s nothing more satisfying than to win a match because of adjustments like these.

Often the pace and pressure is so hectic in doubles that when the actual match is over, you are physically and mentally relieved. But it’s best if you and your teammate can take a little time to analyze your performance. Remember, you want to learn from all your matches.

USRA State Affiliation — Volunteers Spur National Effort

It's been almost two years since the USRA began its amateur affiliation program with the individual states. It has been two years of gratification for me personally to assist the various state chairmen either to get a viable association started or to aid those already in existence.

That has been our goal, to assist and not to rule state associations. The players in any particular state will always have a better feel for the entire racquetball scene in their state. The USRA can only lend its support whenever possible.

We cannot hope to reach every individual club player within a state, other than through National Racquetball. The players who actively participate in state association sanctioned events, or who have family or children who do, have been the first to realize any benefits from our efforts.

Our national association is attempting to have a cohesive national body of state amateur associations that use the same standards we set for successful national events. The three requirements for affiliation are minimal but of utmost importance in achieving success: 1. Any state sanctioned tournament must use USRA official rules; 2. Any state sanctioned tournament must use our official amateur ball, the Seamco "558"; 3. Players who participate must be members of both the state and national associations through our magazine subscription.

The reasons for these requirements should be obvious. The entire country should be playing with the same set of rules, if they play in a sanctioned tournament, support should be given to the manufacturer who is providing them with free balls and tremendous national promotion of the game, and lastly and of key importance they should become part of an organization that supports them in their state and national tournaments.

The last point deserves more attention. The concept of strength in numbers is as evident in racquetball as it is in politics or business. Many initial racquetball organization efforts have simply died on the vine. Why? Because the very people who realize the benefits will not even pay a few dollars to join a state association, usually a $2 fee. This $2 is taken out of a $9 fee once a year for a National Racquetball subscription.

The USRA returns this $2 fee to the state for every single membership received at our office. Seven dollars to us to pay for 12 issues of National Racquetball, and $2 to the state association. We also give an annual $100 donation to each state.

But what does the average tournament player receive for this money?

He or she first receives 12 issues of our complete and helpful monthly magazine with something inside for every type of racquetball player, from novice to professional. Through this membership players then make up the membership rolls of the state and national associations. This list is used to mail out state and regional tournament information, notices of televised racquetball, state newsletters, pro-am tournament entries, as well as our magazine subscription renewals.

The membership rolls insure a strong state association and allow a communication channel to the players; a tournament host benefits too by saving money on shirts and balls. A state chairman can offer a host site up to 12 dozen free balls and a reduced price on additional balls (through Seamco), free shirts for state singles and doubles championships and a 50 per cent reduction in shirt prices for any sanctioned event (through Leach), trophy discounts (through Sports Awards), free score cards, rule books, draw sheets and magazines, plus printed tournament results in our magazine when submitted.

Additionally we provide tournament guidelines, referee guidelines, seeding guidelines, sample state constitutions and by-laws, and Articles of Incorporation. If that isn't a bargain, then there are no bargains in sports, because this is the best spent $9 anywhere.

Obviously, 25,000 individual subscribers have gotten the message that the young USRA has assisted in the hundreds of annual sanctioned amateur tournaments, helped get national television coverage, administered a men and women's pro tour under the NRC and has acted in the best interests of its players.

We have succeeded up to this point by that all-important ingredient in each state, a strong chairman dedicated to the amateur player. Give him support, serve on a committee, and play in USRA sanctioned events. Join the effort in your behalf!

Woody Cox - Hawaii

Where does a former college football player find health and happiness? The answer is in the beautiful sunny Islands of Hawaii, the 50th USRA state affiliate. The newly formed association is called the Hui O Racquetball Hawaii or "Club of" Racquetball Hawaii.

Woody Cox, our newly appointed Hawaii state chairman is 26 years old, single, and is the associate physical director for the Central Branch YMCA in Honolulu. Woody played wide receiver for the University of Nebraska on their 1970-71 National Championship teams and oddly enough became involved in racquetball during that time. You probably watched him play football on television.

Although he had tried paddleball a few times while visiting in Michigan, the original stronghold of the game, he played racquetball the first time next to the football locker room at Nebraska. "The Nebraska players all played," according to the superbly conditioned and muscular Cox. "In the off season, we played inter-squad tournaments and the play was very competitive among these fine athletes."

Woody continued to play racquetball in ensuing years in Los Angeles and later after moving to Hawaii. He had visited the Islands while in college during a regularly scheduled season game and felt compelled to return due to the warm Pacific climate.

Racquetball in Hawaii is popular among those who know of the game. However, the Central YMCA has only four courts. Another local "Y" has four courts, and these make up the only eight public courts in the city.

According to Woody Cox the outer Islands may require some time before racquetball is developed. On the Island of Maui there are two courts which are to be private only, planned for construction in the next few months. Two other sites back in Honolulu have had serious construction delays. So, in the meanwhile, Honolulu remains the strongest area for play. But with the positive emphasis on physical fitness and the highest number of joggers per capita in the 50 states, it's just a matter of time before Hawaii falls in love with racquetball. "Mahalo," to all our Island racquetball players and thank you for your support.

Bringing Racquetball to the Aloha State

As a way of toasting the 50th state to join the USRA we are introducing readers to some of the men and women who are supporting racquetball in Hawaii.

Rapidly improving Kanani Bright, a secretary at the Central YMCA, is a good all around athlete who's enjoying her newest pastime.

Frequent finalist in open tournaments is Owen Lovell, who also is one-half of the current state doubles championship team.

Eighteen-year-old Randy Lau, a student at the University of Hawaii, is considered by many to be the best young player in the Islands.

Jane Goodsell, a superb control player, is the top women's competitor.

Taking time out from his job as detective with the Honolulu Police Department is Manny Rezentes, one of Hawaii's better senior players.
Don Olsen, executive director of the Central YMCA and athletic coordinator of Metropolitan Honolulu, takes a break for some exercise on his home courts.

Well trained Les Skelton, a highly regarded Golden Masters player, is given the best chance at doing well at the National Championships.

Marvin Wong is a 34-year-old Honolulu real estate broker who won the 1977 state singles title, as well as the double title with Owen Lovell.

Sam Koanui earned fourth in the Masters Division during his last trip to the Nationals, which he makes every year. Sam has a reputation for knowing more about racquetball than anyone else in the Islands, and he lends a generous hand when other players need help with their games.

Schoeber's Handball-Racquetball Health Spas, Inc., San Francisco, held its annual Christmas racquetball tournament Dec. 9-11 and Dec. 16-18 with the Ektelon Corporation as co-sponsor.

The tournament drew over 300 participants — 60 of them women — from California, Washington, Utah, Arizona, and Nevada. The first weekend was devoted entirely to the preliminary rounds in the Men's C and D Singles division. The matches were best two out of three, and the first games were played to 21, the third — if needed — to 11. USRA rules applied, with winners required to referee the following matches on the court they had just played.

In the Men's Open Singles the first game began with Stanley Berchtolt taking a 9-0 lead over number one seeded Steve Dunn. It looked as if an upset was in the making. Steve skipped a few into the floor while Gary was rolling his shots out almost at will. And then, with his usual deliberate, methodical style, Steve began to catch up. He began to drive the ball, almost continuously, at either side of Gary, hitting Berchtolt's one important weakness. Gary couldn't handle hard drives without setting Steve up. The final score was 21-19. The second game was a repeat of the first without the initial spurt by Gary. It was all Steve Dunn, as he took an early lead that he never relinquished. Final score: 21-14.

The first game of the Women's Open Singles went to Mary Ludwig and the second to Alicia Moore with identical scores of 21-14. Alicia hit strong pass shots and Mary played fine ceiling games. Alicia won the toss to serve first in the third game, but Mary recovered it immediately and ran off five straight points using hard drive serves and taking advantage of weak returns with solid kill shots.

Mary's relaxed ceiling game, keeping strong shooting Alicia in the back court, carried her on to a victorious 11-7.

A special bonus for the players was to see themselves on local television before they left the club. KRON-TV shot some footage of the players in action and televised it the day of the tournament on the 5 and 11 o'clock news.

Ohio

Over 70 entrants participated in Arlington Court Club's first winter racquetball tournament Dec. 9, 10 and 11.

The Men's A Division saw Don Schefer cruise to an unpressed first place with no opponent scoring better than 10 points. Don's keen ability to place shots and keep his opponents out of position reaffirmed his ranking as one of Central Ohio's top racquetballers. Unseeded Bernie Dennison took second place while number three seed Jim Gordon captured third.

Ellie Chapman took the Women's A Division crown. The O.S.U. graduate student showed great promise by stopping her opponents also in less than ten points. Look for great things from this lady in the coming years as Ellie has only been playing infrequently for one year. The final saw her defeat Carol Bland 21-2, 21-10. Third place went to Rayne Schlutts.

Some of the most exciting competition took place in the B and C Divisions. Pete Boylan overcame a tough field to capture the B title defeating Bob Palmer 21-8, 21-8. Pete a recent handball convert, now moves into the A Division. In the Men's C, Dennis Sazima and John Larcher waged a tough battle going to three games before Sazima claimed the crown 16-21, 21-14, 11-7.

Women's B Division saw Judy Ferguson top Beth of Cleveland, OH, stacking up six one loss. Danny Moore and John Francis Fox of Ohio (Men's C), Sandra Anderson (Women's A) and Sara Winkler (Women's B).

Nebraska

Racquetball players from six states gathered in Lincoln, Nebraska, Dec. 2-5 for the first annual Ben Simons Pre Holiday Racquetball Festival hosted by Sports Courts of Lincoln. The tournament was sanctioned by the Nebraska Racquetball Association, a division of the USRA.

Balls for the tournament were provided by Seagaco. A total of 67 prizes were donated by Ben Simons Clothiers which included sports coats, slacks, sweaters and gift certificates. The tournament was three play, which means all 211 entrants were guaranteed three matches. Each division divided itself into championship, second and consolation flights under the three play system.

The Men's Open Division went true to form as No. 1 seed Mark Hegg, Omaha, met No. 2 seed Ron York, Kansas City, in the finals. Hegg's super court coverage and devastating back hand were too much for the always lough York as the scores (21-10, 21-13) indicate.

The gutsiest performance was turned in by Susie Ordina, Lincoln, who with a 3/9 month pregnancy handicap, bested Karen Harrington, Lincoln, in a thrilling two-game final in the Women's Open (scores 21-19, 21-17). Ordina utilized a strong ceiling game and superior deep-court shooting enroute to her victory.

Notes on Tourney:

Ron Cooley, Jack Andrews, Jeff Wisemiller and Phil Stepp were floor managers, Dick Kincade was tournament director, Pat Korbos helped with press releases, Myrta Hansen handled the hospitality and Bob Gifford and all the people at Ben Simons were enthusiastic backers of Racquetball in Lincoln.

Florida
On a weekend that all areas weathermen forecast as overcast and rain drenched, but that ended up clear and sunny, the City of Cape Canaveral held its Double Racquetball Tournament Dec. 2-4, 1977. There were 114 entrees in three categories: Men's A, Men's B and Women's Open.

The tournament had its share of state and local "names": 1977 Indoor and Outdoor State Open Champion Percy Philman, Rockledge; 1977 Senior State Champion, Mike Mojer, Satellite Beach; 1977 Southeast Regionals Runner-up Cez O'Connell, Jacksonville and Jim Adkins, Orlando, pro at The Racquetball Court Club.

There were two major upsets in the semi-finals. The team of Percy Philman and Jim Adkins, Number 1 seed, were heavily challenged by two Orlando men, Terry Fluharty and Bob Owens. Both teams, receiving first round byes, disposed of their quarter-finals matches readily (Philman-Adkins defeated Sappington and Reep 15-5, 15-6, Fluharty-Owens defeated Gabe-Propper 15-6, 15-8). When both teams met on Cape Canaveral's outdoor courts, tension was in the air as a crowd of 40 looked on from the court's new observation deck. Philman and Adkins played an excellent brand of racquetball winning game number 1 with Fluharty and Owens in hot pursuit 21-17. Obviously upset with the outcome of their game Fluharty and Owens regrouped and blew past the number 1 seeds solidly to win game number 2, 21-11. In the tie breaker it looked as if Philman and Adkins had lost their momentum when Fluharty and Owens had them down 9-1, but a last minute surge by Philman-Adkins brought the score 9-9 before the serve went to Fluharty-Owens. Almost instantly the two points needed to win were made and the match was over 11-9.

The team of Mike Mojer, Satellite Beach, and Russ Latimer, Indian Harbour Beach (Number 2 seed) was upset by a strong Tampa-Gainesville team, Collie Carlton and Larry Swanson in their semi-final match 21-17, 15-21, 11-9. Fluharty-Owens went on to defeat Carlton-Swanson in two excellent games 21-16, 21-10. Philman-Adkins defeated Mojer-Latimer for 3rd place 21-20, 21-15 in probably two of the finest games played all weekend.

Results:

Men's B Consolation: Roy Rutherford and Chuck Myers d. Terry Leimbach and Tommy Weinberg.

John Newcombe doesn't play racquetball in tennis shoes. Why do you?

Or are you one of those still playing in basketball sneakers? Either way, you're selling yourself short.

Let's look at it this way; nobody moves around in tennis shoes better than a champion like John Newcombe. But even he needs a special shoe when he leaves the grass, clay and asphalt tennis courts for the hardwood floors of racquetball.

They can give you much better traction, with a suction tread gum rubber sole that grips so well you can practically scale the walls. They wear longer because of the double-stitched top grain leather, canvas or composition uppers and durable toe overlays. And they feel better because of a contoured anatomical footbed and heel counter.

How To Age Gracefully
On The Racquetball Court

It Takes More Than a Quick Drink of Water

At 20 you might kill yourself digging, fighting, picking up every shot. But at 50 you figure "when it's by you, it's by."

These were some of the comments made during the 1978 USRA National Masters Tournament Feb. 10-13 at SkyHarbor Court Club in Highland Park, IL. The 30 best 45 to 55 year old male racquetball players in the country competed in an invitational round robin tourney that enabled each of them to play 11 games. Highlight of the weekend was a Friday night players' party that USRA President Bob Kendler hosted in his Lake Forest home.

As a group the men were an elegant looking clan, with shocks of gray hair and well-tailored sportshirts that gave them polo player images. The competitors came from all over the country, some traveling from Florida, California, Washington State and New York.

Most of these three to five times a week players (whose main competitors at home are younger men) had reached the top of their professions. Among the players was a cardiologist, a florist, a math professor, a restaurateur, a veterinarian, several real estate investors and an operator of African safaris.

At age 45 to 55 the men are still in fine shape, their brawn and quick reflexes indicating they've been athletes all their lives. But they know they're getting older. Here's a random rundown of observations from the National Masters competitors that we're printing for the growing number of racquetball players "beyond the open."

- I play a hard three games and I've had it for the day. A 23-year-old player gets a drink of water and comes back for more.
- The legs go first. One day you notice you've lost that extra step and a half.
- Generally speaking the youngest players in each age category come out best on the national level. Players today are swinging so hard, they burn themselves out when they're 25. Other than Brumfield players have had it — physically — by the time they're past 30.

USRA National Masters Invitational Tournament Director Chuck Gudbrandsen checks the schedule with Bill Tanner, Memphis, who finished twelfth in the tournament. First, second and third place winners were Bud Muehleisen, Bob McNamara and Sam Poletta.

- Warming up might be pretty important to anyone, but as you get older, it's crucial. Stretching the Achilles tendon by leaning forward toward the wall is important before you play . . . Exercising in the sauna gets the blood going, especially as you do slow stretches.
- Playing regularly is important, but playing every day doesn't give older muscles a chance to rest.
- Racquetball's a lifetime sport because you can play it at your own speed, practice it by yourself. We expect to be playing each other — maybe half speed — when we're 90.

Answers BIG Question

Nineteen pros had two questions on their minds as they arrived in Omaha for the mid-January racquetball stop.

Though there was the usual "How far will I get in the competition?" each woman pondering her own fate knew a bigger issue was at stake. The question was, "Will people pay to watch women play racquetball?"

The spectators who filled the stands and crowded around the glass at Court Sports in the final matches those cold Saturday and Sunday nights answered the question with an emphatic yes.

From the start all 19 players proved women's racquetball was worth watching. The three qualifying matches that opened professional play were equally (and coincidentally) close and exciting — each one 21-19 in two games with a spread of only two or three points in each tie-breaker.

As news of the tournament spread — via word-of-mouth and Omaha's television, radio and daily press — audience numbers grew. So did audience amazement.

"I never knew women could move around a court like that."

"Can you believe a woman hitting a ball that hard?"

Even a male concession. "I think she'd beat me."

By the second day the women realized they were tournament stars. They were playing at prime time, in the exhibition court, hearing results of their games on the TV news.

And success was everyone's. Though there were the inevitable 18 individual losers, 19 pros were part of a victory for women's racquetball.

The last match, with Shannon Wright beating Peggy Sleding in a tie-breaker, gave spectators a serve and shoot exhibition as dramatic as the men's finals. Said one veteran pro: "It's beautiful seeing all those men staring at women for all the right reasons."

What to Look for in a Court Club Nursery

by Mary Jane Bezark

The hand that rocks the cradle is also stroking a classy racquetball game these days. More and more mothers are taking up the game and bringing their pre-school offspring for a stay at court club nurseries.

Is that a good arrangement for young children? Yes, say the experts, if the nursery is satisfactory and has the right kind of supervisor.

"Playing a game like racquetball can help a mother feel good about herself, and the better she feels about herself the more she can give her child. But she’s going to be worried and edgy on the court unless she knows she’s got the best possible substitute taking care of her child." says Lucinda Katz, who’s an assistant professor of early childhood development at the University of Illinois Chicago Circle Campus, a racquetball player and mother of a two month old daughter.

Mothers are right to want a good nursery even if they only play for a short while. "An hour or two for a child can seem like a day or two for an adult," says Linda Blumberg, a Highland Park, IL, psychiatric social worker who serves as a nursery school consultant.

To make sure the time your child spends in a nursery is a plus for him (or her) instead of a minus you’ll want to find a facility that’s safe, has some basic equipment and is supervised by someone who is responsive to children.

How can you know if a nursery meets those standards? The best thing to do is visit when it’s in operation. Look around, chat with the supervisor and stay long enough to see some of the routine and hear how the supervisor talks to the children.

Health and safety top the list of what to look for at a nursery/playroom. A well planned facility won’t have any objects that small children can hurt themselves on — no toys with cutting edges, no tables with sharp corners that children could bump into or fall on, no little parts of toys that toddlers could swallow and choke on. Any apparatus should be sturdy, and all upper story windows should be secured.

"No Scratching or Biting Here"

Another safety precaution to check: are the children closely watched so that the older ones don’t take off on the little ones? "You want the person in charge to set limits. She (or he) should be aware that young children are apt to hit or even scratch and bite, but when that starts she has to separate them and say, ‘No you can’t do that; we don’t hurt each other here, and we won’t let anyone hurt you,’" explains Blumberg.

You might also want to find out about the nursery’s policy on sick children. "A slightly runny nose is one thing, but a cough, beet-red face and warm forehead are another. I wouldn't want to see a child with those symptoms admitted, because it wouldn't be right to expose the others," says Katz.

The best insurance that the children will be safe and have a good time is a tuned-in supervisor on duty in the nursery. It's just not satisfactory to have the supervisor double as a desk attendant even if she's only separated from the children by a glass panel. Says Katz, "A good care giver prevents certain problems from happening by having 'eyes all around her head' and by listening to the kids. She has to be on the spot to say, 'I think you two are playing a little roughly. I'm going to ask you to separate just for a minute.' Or to a child on a climber, 'Boy, it looks like you're pretty high up; let's keep it down to the third rung.'"

"Or let's say a child really feels badly about his mother being away. He doesn't say, 'I really feel badly because my mother's away'; he sits in the corner and sulks. He could be in the corner a whole hour and a half feeling horrible if the care giver weren't there to help."

The experts agree that a supervisor doesn't have to have a particular kind of training, but they all say she should understand how children feel about being away from their mothers.

Explains Blumberg, "Until he's had some experience a little child doesn't understand where his mother is while she's not with him and isn't at all sure that she'll be back. And since his time sense is different from an adult's, an hour or two without Mother can seem like an eternity.

"If he's treated warmly and is reassured while his mother's gone and then sees that she comes back each time, he's making a good start toward comfortable independence."

Indoors or out members' children take part in a planned program of reading, games, exercise and art.
It's O.K. to Miss Mother

Blumberg feels that how a nursery supervisor handles a child crying for his mother is decidedly important. "If she says, 'There's nothing to cry about; you're having a good time,' she's just denying what the child really feels.

"You can tell she knows her business if she holds the child on her lap and says something like, 'I know you miss your mother, but she'll be back.'"

(Your child will adapt to the nursery with greater ease if you go there and stay with him once or twice before the first time you leave him. More about that next month.)

Shirley Lee, resource teacher for San Francisco's public pre-school program, suggests that children who haven't been away from their mothers outside their homes will feel confident about being on their own sooner and enjoy the nursery more if they find the same person in charge whenever they're there. "If a club has two people who alternate days at the nursery, a mother can book her games on the days the person her child knows is on duty. Her child will benefit from the routine and will probably get acquainted with other children who come those days."

Activities and equipment at the nursery don't have to be elaborate, "but there should be enough variety so that children don't get bored after a few sessions and so both an action oriented youngster and one who feels like being quiet can find something they want to do," says Wendy Born, a pre-school curriculum specialist for New York State.

The good old art standbys — paper, crayons, blunt scissors, paste and playdough — can keep some children creatively occupied for hours and should be nursery staples. So should a set of blocks, and to go with them, as they're built into garages, zoos, etc., some small cars, animals and people figures.
Helping Them Pretend

It’s good to have a few dress up clothes on hand to make pretending games more fun, and if there’s room a dishwasher or a refrigerator carton that’s had a door and window cut into it and has turned into a playhouse.

For that active four-year-old a low, portable wooden climber with a slide to go down or a barrel to crawl through is ideal. "The supervisor should also organize some group games and see to it that the active child gets a chance to burn energy. For instance there’s a circle game in which the leader rolls a ball to each child in turn, telling the one who’s ‘it’ to jump up and down four times or do a somersault," says Born.

The nursery should have some books for youngsters who want to sit quietly and some big pillows on the floor so a sleepy child can curl up for a nap.

Finally the nursery needs a supply of juice and crackers for snacks. "Having something to eat helps children cope with loneliness and grumpiness," says Blumberg. "The later in the day it gets and the crankier the children get, the more they need that."

What can you do if there are more children in the nursery at your court club than the supervisor can take proper care of? How can you prepare your child so his first stay at the nursery will be as anxiety free as possible? What no-cost play supplies can you bring to the nursery? Read part II of this two-part series next month.

It’s more than games and toys for boys and girls whose mothers bring them along to Storm Meadows Athletic Club in Steamboat Springs, CO. On Tuesdays and Thursdays the children are part of Exercise Director Karen Macrae’s classes. Karen believes in exercise for these little ones because "we show them how to enjoy it when it’s easy so they’ll keep on exercising when they get older. When they have a youthful body at 40, they’ll be happy they started stretching when they were four."

Here Becky Sherrell, whose mother plays racquetball and is Storm Meadows nursery director, tries the knee to nose pull, pull ups, leg pulls, the toe to ear and the back flex, with and without Karen’s help.
Playing Tip #8

Being able to play the ball off the back wall is a satisfying accomplishment — evidence that your game level is rising. Positioning your body for this shot is the topic of April’s Playing Tip, another in our series from Inside Racquetball for Women, the helpful how-to-do-it by National Racquetball official photographer, Arthur Shay, and top professional player, Jean Sauser, who teaches at SkyHarbor Court Clubs in Northbrook and Highland Park, IL.

The book by Sauser and Shay (who also takes pictures for Sports Illustrated and Time, among other magazines) is available around the country at court clubs and book stores. Publisher is Contemporary books of Chicago.
Mistake—running Behind the Ball

If, pursuing the ball to deep court, you run directly behind it, your shoulders facing the back wall, you will probably find that most of your shots from this position barely get back to the front wall—if they get there at all. This is especially true in back wall play. Your body gets in the way of your racquet follow-through, and you end up hiking the ball over your shoulder, narrowly missing your face. Your generally weak return will give your opponent a setup.

Correction

Use a better body position as you pursue the balls that go past you. As you move back, keep a side view of the ball, not a rear view. If you move back properly, your shoulders will be facing the side wall. Your body will then be out of the way of your racquet stroke, and you will be able to return a stronger shot from deep court or off the back wall. In short try to get to either side of the ball as you race to catch up with it.
Who's Playing Racquetball

Rosemarie Gulley: Windy City TV Reporter

Racquetball, it sometimes seems, is not custom made for television reporters with erratic schedules. There are many days when Chicago's WLS-TV reporter Rosemarie Gulley gets out of bed thinking, "I know I'm going to come home feeling really good after my game," and instead winds up exhausted 14 hours later after covering a fire, a strike and political developments in the windy city.

Rosemarie's introduction to the game was, at the very least, intense. "I got a letter from the Chicago Heart Association asking me to play in their Second Annual Celebrity tournament at the Court House in Northbrook, IL. At first I forgot about it, and then I thought, why not? Be a sport Rosemarie." The 35-year-old TV 'celebrity' of six and a half years took two lessons at the Mid-Town Court House and entered the tournament several weeks later never having played more than 45 minutes at a stretch. After four sets and a final match she and partner Jordan Tilden won second place.

Born in Louisville Rosemarie has been in Chicago since 1956. She received her BA and Master's from Roosevelt University, worked for several years as the executive director of the Independent Voters of Illinois and joined WLS-TV in 1972.

Rosemarie describes her job as "a seesaw", at least as far as hours are concerned. She will often arrive at the station at 7 a.m. on a Monday, 8 a.m. on Tuesday, 1 p.m. on a Wednesday with variations on the same theme during the rest of the week. Her responsibilities include the standard hard news and news features duties of a general assignment reporter, the additional role of education editor, special programs for the programming department and periodic appearances on the station's weekly format show, "Eyewitness Chicago."

Unlike some who take out the day's tensions by becoming even more ferocious and formidable on the court, Rosemarie considers racquetball a release of a different kind. "I'm competitive and under pressure all day long. I play only because I enjoy it."

And she is under pressure all day long, though not just through the demands of WLS. During the past several years she has begun to dip into other fields as well. She now moderates an hour live talk show every other week on WBEZ-FM, Chicago's National Public Radio Station, for the Citizen Information Service, the educational arm of the League of Woman Voters. She teaches a two hour class once a week at Chicago's Columbia College called, 'Reporting and Communications with a Critical I.' And she just signed on as a contributing editor to World Book Encyclopaedia.

Although she has not been playing long, Rosemarie is a confirmed member of the racquetball religion. "When I've finished I know I've done something good for my body, great for my head, and I don't even think about the next day." And her next days aren't so easy to forget.

—Jennifer Alter

There's lots less tension for Rosemarie Gulley with racquet in hand than when she's on camera on location or in the television studio.
by David Allen Evans

I step into a white room and shut the door. Another world. Twenty feet wide, twenty feet high, forty feet long. No loitering here. No staring, either, except at the ball.

So I come to play racquetball — to sprint, leap, dive, whirl around, pant, sweat, pound and pound and pound a ball against a wall. I come for the fun of it, too. To get better. And to win.

There’s another guy in the room with me. We have the same idea: To hit the ball low enough on the front wall so the other man can’t get to it before it bounces twice. A simple idea. Like twins, we share it, taking turns. The first one to score 21 points wins the game. The first one to win two games takes the match.

Simple, simple. The problem is . . . the problem: All these things to think about while I’m doing that.

Keep moving, I tell myself, keep moving, never stop moving, never stand in one spot longer than it takes to shoot the ball and follow through. Move. Shoot. Shoot and move. And then keep on moving, keep the legs alive, keep moving.

The center of the court attracts me like a magnet. Position. Position! Move to the center, occupy the center. Live there as long as you can. When you must leave it, hurry back to it. There — in the center — the walls are closest, the room is smallest. Reduce the room. Shoot from the center.

My opponent is good, as usual. I must learn his tactics, his moods. He tests me, wears me down, breaks my rhythm, hogs center court, forces me to play his game. He’s found out a weakness: my backhand. His shots go to the ceiling too well. He strikes the ball upward; it angles sharp off that flat white sky onto the front wall near the top, bouncing in a high arc deep into the back left corner, spinning with a hiss as it scrapes along the wall.

Again and again, he drives me backward, the ball rainbowing beyond me. I must get there in time to dig it out and slap it back up on the ceiling with my backhand. Now his turn; now my turn; now his; now mine. We follow each other in a circle until one of us falters, sloughs off, hits the ball wrong. Then it lands in mid-court, bounces high, away from the wall. An easy set-up.

I must make this guy play my game, suffer my moods. They ride on the ball each time I strike it. I mix up my serves. I hit Z-balls, wrap-arounds, passing shots, drive shots. I try everything. I run and make him run. THINK! Move and shoot. Concentrate. Move to the center. Live there. And believe in your shots! Look at the ball. Move and shoot.

Then, ‘Good shot,’ I say to the other guy. His serve.

But I can beat him now, I think — or can I? His legs will give out. His shots aren’t quite working. He’s tough — he’s buzzing like an owl, but he’s vulnerable. Get him out of the center. Concentrate! Look at the ball, move, look at it, shoot it! Feel the ball on your racquet — the racquet’s your hand, your wide-stringed palm. Feel the ball as it is met, feel the ball leaving the strings!

The shots are everything. The kill-shot. Especially the kill-shot. The sudden stopper of motion. The shotgun blast low on the wall. If only I could do this thing every time . . .

The ball bounces high in center court. I get there in time for a forehand kill. I plant my feet, bend both knees, my racquet poised, my eyes fastened on the ball as it drops. Then, when it’s just below mid-calf, I bring my racquet through it quick, snapping my wrist, and the ball flattens on the wall two inches from the floor — and rolls out dead.

Yes. My point.

Thrilling Days

Brumfield orchestrates the crowd as he nears the upset win over Hogan...
Before a screaming, jam-packed gallery at the Gresham (OR) Court Club Jan. 15 Charlie Brumfield reached back into days gone by and extracted one more win for his victory starved supporters.

Nothing could have been sweeter for the five-time national champion than his superb and dramatic 16-21, 21-12, 11-8 win in the finals of the Gresham stop on the Colgate Men and Women's Pro/Am Racquetball Tour.

It was stop five for the men on the Seamco and Leach co-sponsored tour and was held in conjunction with the USRA Northwest Regional Championships.

But the big story was Brumfield. The bearded former number one did not have an easy time throughout the tournament with the one exception of besting his long time "patsy" Steve Serot in the semi's. Brum struggled through his round of 16 win, he struggled through his quarter-final win and he struggled all the way to the $4,000 first place check against highly-favored Marty Hogan.

Circumstances were right for Brumfield and he took advantage of them. The championship court at the Gresham Court Club has a full glass back wall only, making visibility easier than on the three glass walled courts currently in vogue.

"It's difficult enough trying to return Hogan's bullets," said Brumfield. "But on three walls of glass it's next to impossible. At least I could see the ball in Gresham."

Yet there was really no indication of the upset in the making from the first game, which Hogan won 21-16. In it Hogan appeared to not even take the match seriously as Brumfield grabbed a 12-7 lead. But Hogan came to life, as if pushing the lever to Warp 9 and proceeded to score nine of the next 10 points and take a 16-13 lead.
Brum is all concentration as he prepares to shoot his backhand into the left corner against Sero/.

Marty, strangely hitting more passes than kills, extended the lead to 19-14 and couldn’t reach 21 for six serves before tallying the magic point by blasting a forehand directly at Brumfield’s feet which Charlie managed to get a racquet on, but couldn’t react fast enough in order to get it to the front wall.

Game two was tied at six and nine before Brum grabbed a 12-9 lead. From that point Charlie played his best half-game in almost two years.

At 15-12 he began a string that included errorless and perfect racquetball. A forehand right corner kill was 16, a forehand dump kill into the right corner was 17, and a forehand fly, rekill made it 18-12. Nineteen came on a pass right and 20 was another forehand right corner kill.

Hogan, in a gesture of supreme disdain, then played the final point left handed, which Brumfield won with a forehand kill into the right corner 21-12, sending the 200+ gallery into fits of ecstasy.

So the tie-breaker was upon them and neither man gained an initial advantage with ties at two and three, before Hogan scored twice on a Brumfield backhand skip of a drive serve and an ace on a drive to the right.

Then Brumfield rode another hot streak. His fifth point was a forehand kill into the right corner, which seemed to be outlined in gold. Point six was a back wall forehand kill and seven came on a V-pass to the right. A backhand left corner kill made eight and when a Brumfield ace hit the crack to the left Hogan was forced into a time out that left the fans on their feet, 9-6 Brumfield lead.

Charlie didn’t let up when play resumed, tallying 10 on a backhand, back wall kill and moving an inch away from his first victory since the National Championships of June, 1976.

But you can never count out Hogan, who regained the serve and scored once with a pass left. Brumfield put him out but was unable to score and Hogan added another one with a pass down-the-line right. Then serving 8-10, Hogan readied to blast one of his patented 142 mph serves, only to have his racquet shatter on impact of the ball, forcing a skip serve and side out.

Again Brumfield came up empty when he reached for the 11th, but Hogan too was unable to score, borrowing a racquet from fellow pro Steve Strandemo.

As the drama built to an unbearable peak Brumfield gained control of the ensuing rally, and put a forehand into the right corner for the match 11-8.

A surprise in the semi-finals was the ease with which Brumfield again did away with Serot. Despite the so called mesmerization that Brumfield seemingly has over Serot, the truth was that Steve was playing super racquetball en route to the semi’s. His quarter-final win over Davey Bledsoe was particularly impressive 21-10, 21-13.

But Brumfield certainly has the lanky southpaw’s number and Steve could do nothing the entire match. After some good early rallies that resulted in a lot of side out situations, Brumfield built a 13-4 lead, extended it to 15-9 and coasted in 21-10. The game was uneventful.

The second game was much of the same, as Charlie jumped ahead 6-1 and 9-2 and held the lead to 14-7. Serot was unable to generate any offense, doing most of his work retrieving, while Brumfield picked his offensive spots.

Serot made a late run, however, closing to 15-17 but that was the closest he got as Brumfield took advantage of key errors by Steve for point 18 on a skipped set up with the backhand, 19 was a forehand skip of a serve return and 20 another forehand skipped serve return.

Just for good measure the match winner was a Brumfield ace which caught the crack at the left wall just behind the short line 21-10, 21-17.

Hogan met Jerry Hilecher in the upper bracket semi-final a few hours later and they gave the fans one good game before Hogan took control of the match.

That game was the first with Jerry playing Marty even throughout the early stages forcing ties at three, four, nine and 13. When Hogan went ahead 15-13 on a Hilecher error and his own pass right, Jerry came right back to tie it with a Hogan skipped serve and Jerry's own backhand kill to the left corner.

Hilecher continued his steamrolling toward 21 with a pass left for 16, a forehand right corner kill for 17 and a beautiful backhand pinch kill left for 18. Hogan came back on an Hilecher error before Jerry took a 19-16 lead with a cross court pass left.

With his back seemingly to the wall Hogan took command. At 16-19 a pass right made 17, and two kills, one backhand, one forehand both straight in tied it at 19, forcing a Hilecher time out.

No help there, though, as Jerry skipped in a kill attempt on Hogan's ensuing serve for Marty's 20th point. The end of game one came moments later when Marty ripped a roll out into the left corner with his backhand off the back wall.

"When Marty gets hot like that, he's uncontrollable," said another pro. "He can be unbeatable."

He was just that in game two, blasting his way to a 12-4 initial advantage and holding on to wait for any comeback bid on Hilecher's part. Jerry managed to close to within 16-12 but another Hogan flurry made it 20-14, largely on the strength (or weakness) of Hilecher errors, which gave Marty freebies at 17, 19 and 21.

The final was 21-14.

The quarter-finals are generally the best matches of a pro tournament and the quarters in Gresham were no disappointment, with three of the four going to the tie-breaker.

In the top bracket Jay Jones went up against the mighty Hogan and almost brought him down. Playing his solid, percentage style, Jones strung out game one and hit his shots in the key times to capture a 21-15 decision.

His steady game, in which he controlled the pace by slowing it way down, forced Hogan errors, but only after superb retrieving on Jones' part. Jay was able to shoot particularly well on the run, another key factor in the win.

Marty started fast in the second and Jay let it go after a while, 21-5, forcing the tie-breaker to determine the winner.

It was super. The packed gallery watched Marty's powerful game rev up as he blasted to both sides and raced to an insurmountable 10-3 advantage. Jones mounted a belated comeback attempt, and just when he closed to within reach at 7-10 Hogan added the match winner, a backhand kill cross court.

Hilecher and Ben Koltun, who always match up close, did it again for the Northwest crowd. Jerry quickly dropped behind in the first 5-1, fell further back at 15-8 and then outscored Ben 13-3 the rest of the way to take a 21-18 first game.

In the second the two St. Louis natives battled to 10-all before Koltun hit his stride taking command on the strength of a five point 21st inning and coasting in 21-10.

But Hilecher had his big serve working in the tie-breaker, scoring four aces of the 11 points, including three of the final five. When the serve cracks out, there's nothing you can do, and Koltun, despite playing fine ball himself, was simply outplayed 11-6.

Serot found Bledsoe not up to his usual high intensity and the St. Louis southpaw took it to the faltering national champ in two quickies 10 and 13.

Bledsoe won the coin toss to start the match and it went downhill from there.

You can always tell a good call when both players disagree. This one occurred in Koltun vs. Hilecher in the quarters.
Bledsoe contemplates the roundness of the sphere as he tries to analyze his predicament, which against Serot in the quarters was a tough one.

In the sixth inning he led 5-4, in the seventh inning he trailed 12-6. Thereafter Davey added ones and Steve added bunches to arrive at the 21-10 first game score.

Serot jumped on top to start the second with an eight point early inning helping an 11-2 outburst. Bledsoe tried to come back and managed to close to 13-11 before Serot began to pull away.

When the game got down to the payoff time, Bledsoe's shots ruffled the dirt and Serot came home the easy winner 21-13.

Brumfield and Keeley, two old foes from control days, had one of the most entertaining matches of the tournament, won by Brumfield in the crazy scores of 21-1, 17-21, 11-3.

With today's power hitters and lively balls it was refreshing to see the fluid, fundamental strokes of these two cerebral players, although at times it was like listening to a 45 rpm record at 33 rpm speed.

Brumfield started well in game one but actually had a better workout warming up as Keeley let it go early 21-1. But as only he can, Steve played tough in game two, grabbed the key points down the stretch and forced the tie-breaker 21-17.

The Brum took no chances here, taking an early lead, extending it and never letting Keeley come close to momentum for an 11-3 winner.

Who were the could haves, but didn't? Mark Morrow in the 16's losing 21-9, 15-21, 11-5 to Jones; Mike Yellen in the 16's losing 11-21, 21-14, 11-6 to Brumfield; Craig McCoy on the short end 21-18, 21-18 to Keeley; and Richard Wagner a point away in the 16's 11-21, 21-20, 11-7 to Bledsoe.

Back On Track

Sequence from the finals shows an effective hinder on the part of Wright, who follows through and is not able to move before her shot comes right back, creating the hinder on Steding.
It took Shannon Wright half the season, but she finally regained the form that made her the dominant force on the '76-77 tour and blasted her way to victory number one on the '77-78 books.

The event was the first women-only pro tour stop in NRC history and the Sports Courts of Omaha, NE, was a center of activity all four days, Jan. 19-22.

It was a tournament of upsets and near-upsets beginning with the qualifying round of three matches in which all three favorites lost in tie-breakers by a combined total of four points.

Along the way number two ranked Jennifer Harding never found her way out of the quarters; number three Janell Marriott scored 20 points in one match, all in the second game; Peggy Steding almost came up short in the first round, and little Martha McDonald made her first trip to the quarters.

Still in all it was Wright's show and she loved it. Her championship match win was over arch rival Steding and it was another of their brutal battles 15-21, 21-18, 11-9.

Steding, who was hobbled slightly by a pulled groin, was down early in the first game 11-2, before she mounted a comeback largely aided by Wright errors.

Shannon, whose style is now reckless abandon, shot the eyes out of the ball early, but as she sought to bring the ball down mid-way through Steding's re-entry into the game, she overcompensated, resulting in a flurry of skips that allowed Steding a 15-13 advantage.

When Shannon tied it at 15-all, Peggy responded with two of her own to 17-15 and followed with an amazing three straight aces for a 20-15 lead. After two super side outs Steding got the point, or actually was given the point on a Wright error 21-15.

As the second game progressed it was apparent to all that Steding did not want to go to a tie-breaker. There was no concession contemplated. Shannon continued to give away points early as Peggy rolled up early leads of 5-1 and 8-3.

But tides do turn and this one did. A red hot shooting spree vaulted Shannon back to an 8-all deadlock before the 42-year-old Steding cranked up three more aces, one a Z to the backhand, the other two drives to the left, and her lead catapulted to 13-9.

But here Peggy seemed to get a bit over-cautious and it cost her valuable momentum. Shannon kept shooting and as she began to hit, the game swung back to her, as she regained the lead 15-13.

The points were traded even as the top ladies went down to the wire. Four times Steding stopped Wright at 20, until the magic vanished at 20-18 when Steding went for an overhead kill from deep court. The shot came up two feet short and the game went to Wright 21-18.

The tie-breaker held the same kind of drama. Steding did not get tired. Wright did not stop shooting. At 4-all Shannon managed a slight lead to 6-4, but Steding came back and tied 6-all.

The atmosphere was electric as they battled as they had in so many of their other meetings over the years. At 10-9 Wright finally managed the match-winner, a forehand back wall kill into the right corner, and victory was hers again.

In the semi-finals Wright stopped Kathy Williams, whom she did not expect to play, 21-10, 21-15. Williams, who had upset Harding the night earlier, didn't have the offensive punch that had been at her side for two days and it cost her against Wright.

Shannon's superb play, which by this time was getting to her friendly foes, was especially superb in game one highlighted by pinpoint passes both ways, fine deep court shooting and supreme confidence.

Unraveled by a questionable call Williams was unable to cope with the conditions and fell behind after staying even to 9-all. Kathy's concentration shattered, Shannon had an easy time running it out.

Game two was not as close as the score might indicate. Wright stayed hot and took command early, which she boosted to 20-10. A let up allowed Williams to sneak the score to Williams was handcuffed during much of her match against Wright in the semi's. Here she struggles to get a backhand up to the ceiling.

Green gave Steding as much as she could handle in the upper bracket semi-final. Here Sarah does all she can to avoid a waffle.

respeckability, if primarily on Wright errors, before Shannon put it away 21-15.
Sarah Green, who like many of the other women on tour, shows continued improvement, almost reached the championship match as she came just this close to knocking off Steding in the semi-finals.

Game one was tenderly close with a 13-all tie resulting. Neither player could put a string together, which was probably a plus for underdog Green who was showing good aggressiveness and controlling her share of the court. Her own confidence bouyed Green began shooting well late in the game and using straight drive serves to Steding’s backhand hit a few cracks and ran out 21-15.
Wright's excellent forehand form keeps Marriott in deep court during their quarter-final match.

The second game was carbon copy material — no big leads, nip and tuck all the way to 17-all. This time it was Steding who grabbed the necessary points including an ace on a drive to the forehand. Sarah used time outs wisely but ineffectively and the tie-breaker loomed ahead.

This game made the efforts in triplicate as they traded points reached to 9-all, then finally 10-9 Steding, who serving match point hit an ace to the crack left for the winner. Or was it? Referee Terry Fancher’s call of “short” stopped all victory dances and when the appeal upheld the ref, a second serve was in order.

The issue became dead a second later, however, as a forehand kill straight in to the left was a winner 11-9.

In one of pro racquetball’s weirdest matches ever Wright beat Marriott in the quarters by the outrageous scores of 21-0, 21-20. Don’t ask how the third ranked player in the world can get a donut. Nobody believes it still.

The truth is that Shannon Wright played one perfect game of racquetball. She killed from everywhere, her serves were devastating to both sides and she drove the ball precisely. Marriott let it go at about 14 and hoped for the best in the second.

Shannon came out shooting again, but after a quick burst at the outset, the jets cooled. But instead of going back to percentage, Wright forced the fancy shots and the result was a 14-8 Marriott lead. Only then did Shannon start playing smart and the lead began to shrink.

At 19-all Marriott tallied once, but was unable to get the big one and Wright, wasting no time, tallied twice and took the match 21-20.

For Martha McDonald her first trip to the quarters was a quick one as Green totally dominated play for 21-6, 21-9 wins. Martha was flat and tight, Sarah controlled play throughout and as somebody in the gallery said, “it’s a different game when you get to the quarters.”

Martha Byrd McDonald — it was her first career trip to the quarter-finals.
Harding goes to the ceiling with her forehand during her upset loss to Williams in the quarters.

Walton drives a pass cross court against Steding in the quarters.

Williams, perhaps thinking to two lost matches to Harding with 21-20 games a big part of them, managed to get the key points in the first game against TV star Jenny, resulting in a 21-19 win.

Long rallies and a tight game were the trademarks in that first encounter as ties occurred at 11, 13, 15, 16 and 18 before Kathy snuck in the winners.

The second was opposite as Williams controlled throughout, her backhand into the left front corner outplaying Jennifer's vaunted forehand and Williams took it away 21-14.

The final quarter-final match found Steding playing Karin Walton, and the Steding mystique got to the pert rookie from California in the first game. An early game hot streak earned Peggy the lead and Karin was never able to fully recover, closing to 14-18 once, but that was it.

The second game was a much better effort on Walton's part, in fact she should have won the game. Down 10-13 Karin ripped two aces to make it 12-13 and an inning later she tied the score at 14. Next time in she ran three to 17-14 but her hold button got pushed just then.

When Steding tied it at 17, Karin wilted. An ace for Steding was 18, a backhand fly kill made 19, followed by a Walton error for 20. The finale was routine procedure.

To Walton's credit she battled back hard in the second game and was duly impressive after being intimidated in the first.

Now about those qualifying matches. Dena Rassenti was supposed to beat Camille McCarthy, but it was Camille in the tie-breaker 11-10. Glenda Pommerich was supposed to beat Judy Thompson, but in the tie-breaker it was 11-10 for Judy; Marci Greer was supposed to beat Sally Murphy, but Sally was still there in the next round thanks to an 11-8 finish.

And the Steding scare? It was Pat Schmidt, turning the tables on her in the first game 21-9 before Steding regrouped and recaptured that elusive concentration 21-7, 11-2.
Women's Racquetball Gets Maternal Boost

Sally Marriott, Kay Ebbert (Kathy Williams' mother), Virginia Sauser and Rita Hoff, left to right, were among pros' mothers at the Omaha stop. Also attending were Joan Walton, Johanna Schmidt, Helen Anderson (Jennifer Harding's mother) and Helen Pasternak. Celebrity treatment from Court Sports of Omaha included corsages and a mother-daughter brunch.

"If she doesn't try it as a pro, she might regret it all her life," says Johanna Schmidt, explaining why she's backing her daughter, Pat, playing the professional racquetball circuit for the first time this year.

Johanna — one of eight mothers who came to Omaha to root for their daughters during the premier women's only pro racquetball stop — added that her husband was "an excellent golfer who never had a chance to see if he could be a successful pro. He's glad his daughter's having her chance."

Watching your daughter compete in a national tournament can be pure pleasure. Johanna Schmidt was glad she was in the grandstand the first game in the round of 16's when Pat beat Peggy Steding, even though Pat lost the match.

But watching can be painful. One mother tried to view each of her daughter's matches, but gave up midway in the first games. "For some crazy reason I feel as if I'm responsible for her playing. I think we're both better off if I don't watch."

Watching daughters compete against each other can get touchy, too. When two pros with visiting mothers met in a court, the usual maternal cluster broke up as each woman found her own spot in the stands to follow her daughter's play.

But watching was only one reason the mothers were in Omaha. The trip was just as much to get to know each other and the other players, and to have a good time. Most of all it was to learn what it's like to be in the center of racquetball — the center of their daughter's lives.

Winning Racquetball is intended for beginning players seeking shortcuts to racquetball competence as well as those who have achieved the competence required to enter local club tournaments and last at least a round or two.

Building on the basics, Shay and Leve cover such areas as the mental attitudes required to win tournaments; how to get into supershape for racquetball; how to use your limitations (fatigue, for example) as advantages; and how to play against someone who is trying to out-psych you. There are winning suggestions for every department of play.

Proven racquetball winners, such as Steve Keeley, Steve Serot, Sue Carow, Kathy Williams, Charlie Brumfield, Bill Schmidike, Ron Rubenstein, and racquetball’s 19-year-old superstar Marty Hogan, are photographed in action and quoted throughout to illustrate the points made in the text.

Winning Racquetball will lead the racquetball enthusiast to the level of competence and beyond into tournament excellence.

National Racquetball's on the Newsstands

Now racquetball players in the midwest can find the only monthly publication devoted to their sport when they stop at the magazine rack of their local drugstores or supermarkets.

Prior to February National Racquetball was available only through home subscriptions and at court clubs around the country. But the growing number of players (around 5.5 million at last count) created a demand for newsstand distribution, which should extend to other parts of the United States in coming months.

To respond to the player boom National Racquetball is tailoring its contents to its broader readership with stories geared to beginners as well as intermediate and advanced players.

National Racquetball, established in 1972 as a bi-monthly, became a monthly magazine in January of 1978.

Court Club Owners Share Ideas At NCCA First Convention

Some 400 National Court Clubs Association members and their guests heard Jim McKay, ABC-TV sports commentator, at a Saturday night banquet during the NCCA's first convention Jan. 19-22 in Anaheim, CA.

Three new directors — Charles Spaulding, Spaulding Racquet clubs, Manchester, MO; Steven Pease, Wallbangers, Cupertino, CA, and Bruce Hendin, Racquetball and Handball club of San Antonio, TX — were elected at the Saturday morning session. Cathy Austin will continue as national coordinator.

NCCA President John S. Wineman, Jr., president and principal of the Court House, midwest chain of clubs based in Chicago, said "The four 90-minute round table discussions, where owners and operators shared information, were the highlights of the proceedings to many, who also benefited from hearing experts in statistical analysis, site selection, marketing, finance, design and construction."

A Christmas shopper became the 10,000th member of the Sports Illustrated Court Club chain.

As a uniquely personal gift for Ed Raseman, 34, who had played racquetball when he attended Notre Dame, wife Lynn, 32, bought a family membership in the chain's Kalamazoo-Turwill Lane club.

Lynn's lucky timing won the family some $400 worth of racquetball equipment and clothing, donated by Leach, Ektelon and Sports Illustrated Court Clubs, and five hours of free court time.

Ed Raseman, operations manager at National Storage Company, Kalamazoo, is an all-around athlete who made the varsity swimming and football teams in high school.

Lynn is a registered nurse who works part-time at Bronson Hospital in Kalamazoo.

Not only Ed and Lynn but six-year-old son Bumper expect to take advantage of the family membership.

The Sports Illustrated chain reached the 10,000-member mark with only five clubs open and only 14 months after opening its first club. President Craig Hall expects to double that figure sometime this spring when 10 clubs will be operating and to hit the 40,000-member mark with 15 to 20 clubs before year-end 1978.

Racquetball Raises Charity Dollars

Number Two Men's Pro Charlie Brumfield and Seventh Ranked Jay Jones settled a bidding battle over a diamond pin by playing the best of three games during a tournament at West Los Angeles' Century Racquetball club that raised $2,500 for the Children's Hospital of Los Angeles. When Brumfield tried to outbid Jones for the pin during the auction of items donated by local stores, the pros decided to settle the bid on the courts. Jones, who lost the close third game, said "I let him win because the pin wouldn't have looked good on me."

18 High Schools Participate in Spaulding League

The Spaulding Racquetball Clubs, Inc., have established a new high school club racquetball league among 18 high schools in St. Louis county.

The leagues, which involve more than 400 students, approximately one-fourth of them girls, began mid-January. Each team has four players and a teacher sponsor as a coach. Many high schools are represented by four to six teams.

Following ten weeks of league play a playoff tournament was scheduled to determine the league champion, with each high school represented by its best four players based on wins and losses in league play. All games are to 21, one on one, and players referee themselves.

In making the league announcement, Spaulding club chain president, Chuck Spaulding, said, "we are simply overwhelmed by the tremendous response of high school students in the area to playing racquetball, and we believe this first effort by Spaulding in organizing a high school league is just the beginning."

Brumfield Signs with Sportrooms

Five time national racquetball champion Charlie Brumfield has signed a five year contract with Racquetball International Corp., developers of the Sportrooms, a chain of private racquetball clubs and fitness centers.

According to the agreement, announced by Ed Torkelson, president of RIC, Brumfield, 29, will represent the Sportrooms exclusively on a national basis, visiting each club throughout the year, upgrading programs in instruction and conducting clinics revolving around the sport's most recent techniques.

Brumfield, called by his colleagues "The Holder of All Titles," is two-time national doubles champion, two-time national three-wall champ and two-time Canadian national champion. He holds the record at 25, for consecutive racquetball tournament titles.

Brumfield is a graduate of the University of San Diego School of Law and a member of the California Bar, but has given up the law for racquetball.

L. J. Eiben is only three, but he's a twice-a-week racquetball player.

L. J. and his four-year-old sister, Cristen, play in a child size court whenever their father and mother, Larry and Lorraine, take them along to the Health'n Sports Racquetball Club in Westbury, NY.

With parents who are top players L. J. and Cristen are eager to learn the game. They get instruction from the nursery director, Robin Englehardt, or from one of the club's pros or from Larry or Lorraine, who sometimes spend five or 10 minutes in the mini court before the family heads for home.

L. J. and Cristen are among dozens of mini racquetball players whose parents are members of Health'n Sports. The three to eight-year-olds bat the ball around or play a game in a five, by 10, by seven foot court which children enter from a door off the Health'n Sports nursery.

Owner Abe Shames got the idea for the court shortly after he decided to convert a former Long Island movie theater into the present racquetball club.

"We had a good size area for a nursery," Shame's son, Jerry, who is co-manager explained. "My dad felt there was room for a mini court that kids would enjoy and that would encourage mothers to use the club."

Work on the club started in November of 1976, and by the following January the mini court was complete. Jerry Shames estimated that the small court cost between $2,500 and $3,000.
"The mini court helped us sell memberships before we opened in June of 1977," Jerry Shames said. "It gave people new to the sport an idea of the fun of the game when they saw their kids get into the mini court and play."

Health'n Sports architect, Raymond Fellman, designed the small court on a one-quarter scale, except for the seven foot high ceiling. The panel system and the door are the same type used in the club's regulation courts. Four mercury vapor lights fit flush with the ceiling, and one wall is plexiglass.

To keep the ball moving around the court at a speed small children can handle, boys and girls play with molded plastic racquets with thick plastic strings — equipment used in water sports games at beaches or swimming pools. Most mini racquetball players hit an official Seamco 558 or 559 ball, but when a very tiny tot asks to go into the court "to see what it feels like," Robin will provide a softer, larger rubber ball. Robin also recommends some kind of eye protection.

During peak times — such as weekends or on Wednesdays when the women's league is in session — Robin, who's had special education training and is a recreational racquetball player, sets up continuous round robin tournaments. She lets the children play games of six or seven points with the winner staying on to accept all challengers.

"We have some very good little players," Robin said. "They tell me 'I can't wait to show Daddy how I play.'"

And then the inevitable: "The mini court's too small for me." "I'm getting too good for the mini court." "I can't wait to get on the big courts."

Not a bad way to guarantee a new generation of racquetball players.

New Court Clubs

Editor's Note: Beginning with this issue our court club section, which has grown more rapidly than any other part of National Racquetball, will highlight new facilities by listing.

Club owners are encouraged to continue to send National Racquetball information on their facilities for two important reasons. First we will send each club 10 free copies of all issues of National Racquetball to distribute among members. Second it is important that we be able to spread the word about your club to all those who inquire about their local courts.

Additionally we will continue to publish court club feature articles which will interest all racquetball players.

We appreciate your comments.

A bold, $500,000 All-Professional sports racquetball tournament has been announced by the California-based Volli Corporation. The tournament, which will match professional athletes from all except racquet and paddle sports, will be played in Las Vegas at various times this year.

The goal, as explained by Jim Flood, managing partner of the sponsoring All-Pro Sports, Ltd. and founder of the concept, is to "determine the best racquetball player among professional athletes."

The All-pro tournament will hold separate events in the following categories: baseball, football, miscellaneous and veterans.

In the baseball and football tourneys competitors must be currently on major league rosters. In the miscellaneous division players must earn at least $15,000 in their professional sport. Veterans must have spent at least one full season on a major league roster.

The All-Pro Racquetball tournament has been sanctioned by the U.S. Racquetball Association.

"We feel that the All-Pro concept is something that will help promote racquetball," said USRA president Bob Kendler. "And anything that helps promote racquetball is good for the game."

It is well known that many top athletes in a variety of professional sports are racquetball fanatics. Many well known players and coaches play and/or encourage their players to use racquetball as off-season conditioning.

Football head coaches Jack Pardee of the Washington Redskins, and Don Coryell, formerly of the St. Louis Cardinals, are both avid racquetballers. Pardee, who is a three times a week man, and Coryell, who owns a number of facilities, both encourage play among their coaches and players.
Gene Gibbs, assistant to Coryell at St. Louis, won the 1976 National Seniors championships in San Diego and is winner of numerous other events.

"We think the All-Pro tournament will help uplift all of racquetball's professionals," said Charlie Drake, president of racquetball's Leach Industries and an investor in the event. "The publicity and promotion of All-Pro will spread to the regular racquetball pro tour."

To prove his point, Drake indicated that top Leach professionals Marty Hogan, Charlie Brumfield, and Richard Wagner would be on hand at each of the All-Pro tournaments to help instruct players, referee and generally help run the tournament.

Most of the All-Pro events will be held at the brand new Las Vegas Racquetball Club, the first all-racquetball/handball facility in the glitter town.

Tournament director will be the club's manager, Dan Seaton, who is also Nevada state chairman for the USRA.

"We're as excited as every one else about the concept," said Seaton. "It should attract nationwide attention."

Each phase of the tournament will determine a finalist who will compete against other finalists in each category in a Grand Finals, scheduled for January, 1979.

"I believe there will be a great demand for national television coverage of the Grand Finals," said Flood. "We expect the interest will be high."

Finalists in each category are guaranteed $10,000 each and the overall Grand Finals winner collecting $50,000.

Al Oliver and Don Kessinger were the co-winners in the racquetball event for baseball players held as part of the recently announced All-Pro Racquetball tournament.

Oliver, former Pittsburgh star recently traded to Texas, defeated Craig Swan, Met pitcher, 21-11 and 21-12, and Kessinger, the former Chicago Cub great and currently with the Chicago White Sox, whipped Tim Foli, San Francisco, 21-14, 21-9.

The winners each received $4,000 and qualify for the All-Pro Racquet finals against winners from similar qualifying tournaments for other athletes. The champion will earn $50,000 from an expected purse of $150,000.

More than 30 baseball stars participated in the double-elimination event held in Las Vegas Jan. 30-Feb. 1. In the championship round of eight Oliver downed Bobby Valentine (Mets) 21-9, 21-14; Swan whipped Richard Dauer (A's) 21-11, 21-12; Kessinger beat Gary Carter (Expos) 21-6, 21-4 and Foli trimmed John Stearns (Mets) 21-14, 21-9.

Oliver believes that he has the edge in the finals which are scheduled for late in the fall.

"Of all the pro sports baseball players have the greatest edge when it comes to racquetball because the sport requires good eye-hand coordination," he said. "The sport also demands absolute concentration, the type of concentration required of a good hitter."

Kessinger is familiar with the sport since he owns two racquetball clubs.

"If my owning two clubs gives me an advantage, then Walter O'Malley has an advantage when it comes to hitting home runs because he owns the Dodgers," he said. "The neat thing about this tournament is that we can go on and compete against pros from other sports."

Valentine, a quarter finalist, credits racquetball with his rehabilitation from a broken leg.

"Racquetball has been my entire rehabilitation program," he said. "There were those who said I would never be able to play baseball again."

The tournament, conceived by All-Pro Sports, Ltd. of San Diego, CA, has as its sponsors Leach Industries, the nation's largest manufacturer of racquetball racquets, and Seamco Sporting Goods.
Canadian Government Helps Racquetball Grow North of the Border

By George Vaia

Racquetball’s growth in Canada has in many ways paralleled that of its American cousin, but on a considerably smaller scale. Canada is a sprawling country, physically larger than the United States, but with only 10 per cent of its population. The evolution of racquetball in Canada is slightly behind that in the States.

The huge potential of this North American phenomenon is starting to be realized with the creation of the Canadian Racquetball Association in 1971 and the aid of the Canadian government.

Accurate estimates are difficult to come by; however, the explosion of racquetball across Canada is a reality. A case in point is what has happened in Montreal, Quebec, where in 1974 there were only seven courts, while today there are over 30, with another dozen or more in the planning stages. Across Canada there are 300 courts with another hundred likely to be built soon. Approximately 100,000 sports people are engaged in playing the super-sport of racquetball.

The growth of racquetball in Canada can best be exemplified by the Montreal Open Tournament held annually in Montreal, Quebec. From its inception in 1973 with 90 participants, most of whom were local, to the 1977 tournament there was a dramatic increase in both the number and nature of the participants. Two hundred and twenty players from across Canada and from Eastern United States entered.

Played at the Cote de Liesse Racquet Club, an eight-court facility housed in a tennis, racquetball and squash complex, the new four-court addition proved a roaring success. One of the new courts, with a complete side glass wall and seating capacity for over 250 people, assured that all matches from the quarter-finals onward had an overflow audience of 300 spectators. This resulted in a new phenomenon for Eastern Canadian racquetballers: a boisterous, sometimes critical, continuously active and openly opinionated assembly of sports spectators who not only encouraged and rewarded the best in athletic performance, but added a totally new dimension to racquetball play — the maddening crowd. Simultaneously there was local television filming and a university group shooting video tape of the competition to be used to examine energy expenditures required in the playing of racquetball.

Tournament Draws Colorful Players

The players responded, as players will, with superb performances of solid racquetball and some stimulating theatrics. Leo Marsocci introduced the Canadian audience to the unspoken as well as the spoken language of racquetball with his luminary lexicon of audio-visual expressions. Manny Gregorio leaped through the air with the greatest of ease, with and without the flying trapeze. And Monique Parent, in the ladies’ final, hit three spectacular behind-the-back shots in a row: one for a kill, and two for perfect passes. And so it went.

For the first time in Canada, $1,000 in prize money was offered to the winners of the top four places in the Open division and the winners of the Senior and Ladies divisions. This added a new and exciting element to the tournament and insured press coverage for the entire event.

The competitive status of amateur racquetball for Canada vis-a-vis the United States was pinpointed and highlighted by the outcome of the Montreal Open. This tournament drew many excellent American players from the East including top competitors in the East including top competitors in the Open division and the winners of the Senior and Ladies divisions. This added a new and exciting element to the tournament and insured press coverage for the entire event.

The Open all the American players lost to their Canadian counterparts, and, except for the Junior division, no Americans won final events. The quality of racquetball in Canada is definitely on the upswing and it is not by accident.

Sports in Canada are given considerable encouragement by the Canadian Government. Under the guidance of Ivan Velan and Steve Milstein the Canadian Racquetball Association has been extremely successful in promoting the cause of racquetball with Sport Canada, a branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The CRA received federal funding of $20,000 in 1975, $37,000 in 1976, and hopefully will receive $45,000 this year. These financial grants, which are given only for designated projects, are of major significance in promoting both the development and excellence of racquetball throughout Canada.

Philosophically the Canadian government is genuinely interested in promoting physical fitness and sport activities. Sport Canada is especially helpful and creative in aiding the development of athletics. Consequently it is more than willing to put its best “dollar” forward to deserving applicants.

Government to Sponsor Coaching Accreditation

Racquetball is supported by Sport Canada in a myriad of ways. Areas where application for aid have been made include junior development programs, officiating, coaching programs, national championships, national ranking system, racquetball promotion and preparation of teams for the Canada Winter Games.

One of the most exciting projects is the Coaching Certification Program. With the aid of Sport Canada’s technical staff and resources the first coaching manual already has been formulated to provide interested racquetballers an opportunity to receive formal training in the art and science of coaching, which will lead to accredited certification.

Another field of interest is in refereeing. The government is supporting a program of accreditation for racquetball referees with the aim of standardizing the quality and caliber of officiating for tournaments across Canada.

In the area of youth development special games are held every two years. These Canada Games, as they are called, are especially aimed at promoting athletic excellence and interaction among Canada’s young people. In the 1979 Canada Winter Games to be held in Brandon, Manitoba, racquetball has been accepted for the first time as an official sport. This has opened the door for considerable additional financial support and interest on the provincial (state) level for racquetball.

And, finally, there is the real possibility that through Canadian government support a sports director might be appointed to coordinate racquetball activities on the national level. The federal government would pay the director’s salary and offer office space, while the sports organization involved would pay rent and office expenses. The real possibility of an executive director in Canada’s capital will enormously assist the growth of Canadian racquetball.

What’s happening to racquetball in Canada? Tremendously exciting things. Canadians look at American racquetball achievements with interest and admiration. In turn Canadians serve notice to their friends from the south that racquetball is an international sport and Canada’s fastest growing indoor sporting activity.

Conditioning For Players Who Are Serious About Winning
by Marcus B. Sorenson, Ed.D

When two players of absolutely equal physical and mental skills enter a racquetball court, there will be only two factors which have a bearing on the outcome of the games they play. These factors are luck and physical conditioning. If both players stroke the ball equally well, if strategy and court knowledge is equal, if neither player is "psyched out" by the other, then only a freak ball, an accidental kill shot or perhaps a slick spot on the playing surface might make the difference in the score of the first game. This is the luck factor.

Luck, however, has a way of equalizing over a period of time. A far more important aspect, which will become evident as play continues, is physical conditioning. The player in superior condition will soon begin to dominate play. This will happen in spite of the similarities in skills and will make it appear that the highly conditioned athlete is far more skillful than his weaker opponent. This illusion is due to the former's ability to move to the ball quickly and execute properly, whereas his opponent is incapable of doing likewise because of a higher fatigue level.

When the poorly conditioned player begins a consistent and determined fitness program, his play will likely improve to the point that the only real factor having an influence on game scores will be this: Which player has the better conditioning program!

Train hard if you're serious

For all serious players hard training is a must. It should be undertaken correctly or much valuable time will be wasted by techniques which do not relate to racquetball, or by superfluous training. A training method should always be designed specifically for the demands that a particular sport places on the participant's body. Many trainees, however, fail to accurately recognize and analyze those demands, and thereby end up performing an exercise in frustration. As an example long distance running relates very poorly to actual court play but does give a player staying power and endurance over several consecutive games and matches. Conversely wind sprints relate very closely to actual court play but do not produce the type of endurance which long distance work builds. Thus it can be seen that long distance running alone is far from being the best method of training for racquetball, especially when it is done to the exclusion of wind sprints and other training techniques. This is true of any method which excludes other good conditioning procedures.

From the above paragraph it can be seen that correct performance of training exercises and proper balance among those exercises are essential for proper conditioning. It remains now to analyze and define the best conditioning activities and then put them to work in a properly balanced program.

To define the ultimate conditioning methods we must first take a look at the racquetball player from a strictly physiological standpoint and analyze his training needs. There are four basic components of conditioning for racquetball: (1) Aerobic training, (2) Anaerobic training, (3) Muscle strength training and (4) Muscle endurance training.

Aerobic training consists of exercises which tax the cardiovascular system of the body by demanding a constant supply of oxygen to the working muscles. Some of the positive effects that accrue are a more efficient heart, easier breathing and better blood supply to the muscles. Some examples of aerobic athletes are long distance runners, long distance bicyclists, distance swimmers and cross country skiers. Characteristic of well conditioned aerobic athletes is the ability to endure long, continuous bouts of moderate physical exertion and to recover quickly from those bouts. Racquetball is not a continuous bout of moderate physical exertion but rather a series of short, violent bursts. Therefore racquetball players can benefit from aerobic training only insofar as it helps to reduce fatigue over long, grueling games and matches.

Plan three aerobic sessions a week

For the racquetball player three half hour or forty-five minute aerobic exercise sessions per week will produce the ultimate in cardiovascular benefits as they relate to racquetball. Anything more is superfluous and will cut into training time which could better be used in anaerobic training, muscular endurance training or strength training. Your sessions may take the form of continuous running, swimming, bicycling or cross country skiing. There is but one requirement: The heart rate must be maintained at rates appropriate to your age. For people in good general physical condition who are 30 to 40, the figure is 140; under 30-150 is better; over 40-130 probably is adequate. This will insure a heavy enough work load for cardiovascular improvement to occur. To measure heart rate count the pulse for 10 seconds and multiply by 6 to obtain beats per minute. This should be done immediately after each session, because heart rate will decrease as aerobic fitness increases. When the heart rate drops below the recommended figure per minute during the work session, it will be necessary to increase the intensity of the work to bring the rate up and continue aerobic improvement.

Anaerobic training means without oxygen. An exercise such as sprinting is so demanding that it is impossible for the body to supply enough oxygen to the working muscles during the sprint. Racquetball is basically a series of anaerobic bursts around the court. Muscles can work for only very short periods of time without oxygen, however, and during those bursts where oxygen demand exceeds supply, the muscles form what is known as an oxygen debt. During the interval between the bursts oxygen must be furnished to the muscles to repay the debt or further bursts will be impossible. It becomes obvious that the best conditioned players can incur the greatest debt and repay that debt fastest during rest intervals. Anaerobic training produces this ability. Some of the best anaerobic training exercises are repetition all out sprints, repetition bicycle, sprinting and repetition swim sprints. A good method of anaerobic training is this: Sprint at full speed for 10 seconds. Rest until the heart rate drops to 120 beats per minute and then repeat the sprint. Continue this procedure until you have completed 20 sprints. Three sessions per week will be sufficient and will also be as much as most athletes can stand mentally, since this is extremely grueling exercise. Alternate your anaerobic and aerobic training days.

Muscle strength training. Muscular strength is important to the racquetball player, especially in the area of the hip and knee. These areas must constantly bend and support the weight of the body.

Without sufficient strength a player will try to execute his swing from the upright position rather than bend his hip and knee joints to stroke the ball properly. Weight training is the fastest way known to build strength. For the hip and knee areas the parallel squat with a barbell will quickly build and maintain a high level of strength. To perform this exercise support a barbell which weighs 50 pounds more than your own body weight across the shoulders behind the neck. Squat down until the top of your thigh is absolutely parallel to the floor and then return to an upright position. Repeat this exercise 20 times. Three squat sessions per week are sufficient.

Put Pullups in your schedule

For upper body strength 12 pullups three times and 15 parallel bar dips three times weekly are sufficient. Do all strength exercises on the same days as you do your aerobic training. If you are not capable of doing the exercises as described, then your strength may be inadequate for long, hard racquetball matches. Work diligently until you can perform them in the numbers suggested.

Muscle endurance training. Muscle endurance is the ability of muscles or muscle groups to repeat particular movements against resistance many times without fatigue. The more a particular movement can be repeated, the greater is the endurance of the muscle which performs that movement.

There are two ways to develop muscle endurance: (1) By strength training, as discussed previously. It is obvious that if a muscle is strong, each movement it

By combining several hours of racquetball each week with the techniques just described a player can develop tremendous fitness for racquetball playing. Figure 1 rates the effects of various training methods on the four fitness components. Figure 2 is a suggested weekly program for the serious-minded racquetball player.

Occasionally players ask, "Why not just play more racquetball to get in good condition?" The answer is this: when the body fatigues during racquetball play, this fatigue causes a failure to move to the ball, bend the knees and execute a proper swing. This means that the player will be practicing incorrect techniques which will be a detriment to his game. Also hard training is essential, and racquetball is only hard if players are equally matched. To be an excellent player you must train to play, not play to train.

Give the conditioning program suggested in figure 2 an eight week try. You'll be amazed at the improvement in your game. Good luck!!

The 1978 National Championships coming up June 17-24 in Belleville, MI, will highlight two new age brackets and four new divisions of play.

The new categories are Super Masters for men aged 65 and over, and Women Seniors for ladies aged 35 and over. Play will be held in singles and doubles for both divisions.

"We are extremely happy to be able to include these new events," said USRA National Commissioner Joe Ardito. "It is important that we continue to give as many racquetball players as possible a chance to test their skills in competition."

The Nationals, to be held at the brand new Sports Illustrated Court Club just outside Detroit, will be the biggest Nationals ever, according to advance estimates.

The tournament will be highlighted hospitality-wise by the annual USRA awards banquet along with many special events.

"We're looking forward to putting on the finest racquetball tournament in history," said Tournament Coordinator Gil Schmitt. "Everything that the player could possibly want over the eight days will be available."

The Sports Illustrated club, which features a three wall glass court that doubles as a disco, seats over 600 on the championship court.

The property known as Lemon Tree, an apartment/condominium/office complex, is adjacent to the club and features everything from swimming, golf and boating to barbeques and beaches.

A separate hospitality area will be set up in a huge tent just outside the club, to accommodate the expected 500 plus participants.

"When tickets go on sale, we expect them to last less than four weeks," said Schmitt, whose staff has been preparing for the event for months.

"There isn't a bad seat in the house."

Tournament headquarters will be the Ramada Inn, 8270 Wickham Rd., Romulus, Mich. (313) 729-6300. Contact Jim LaBadie. One hundred and fifty rooms have been set aside for racquetballers, but just in case, overflow arrangements have been made with three nearby hotels, the Host International, Briarwood Hilton and Airport Hilton.

The fact that this is the first time the National Championships have been held in the central portion of the U.S. since the inception of pro racquetball is a challenging one to Schmitt, a former Michigan state racquetball champion.

"We want to prove to the racquetball world that the midwest is capable of hosting the absolute best in racquetball events," he said. "San Diego was great each of the last two years, but we intend to be better."

84 APRIL
Kunnan /Leach To Host Tournament of Champions

The Kunnan Lo Corporation of the Republic of China, the world's largest racquetball racquet manufacturer, will co-sponsor with Leach Industries of San Diego, the Kunnan/Leach Tournament of Champions May 11-14.

The tournament will feature $20,000 in prize money and will be played at King's Racquetball Court in Westminster, CA. First place will be worth $7,500, the largest single prize in racquetball's history.

Twelve touring professionals will compete in an unusual format that is actually a double elimination tournament of sorts.

In the first round the top four ranked players will receive byes, with players five through eight meeting nine through 12.

The second round will pit first round winners against the top four, while the losers have a round off. The winners of this second round each receive $500, while the losers get ready to play the first round losers in the third round.

The losers of this round are then eliminated and their prize money is what they came in with - zero. The winners are awarded $500 each and move on to play the second round winners.

Each winner of this round (the equivalent of the quarter-finals in a normal tournament) receives $1,000 while the losers take the next bus home.

The four winners then play in the semi-finals, with winners cashing $2,000 checks each, and the losers packing their bags.

The last two winners play in the championship match in a winner-take-all $4,000 first place match.

"The concept has two key ingredients," said Charlie Drake, president of Leach Industries and the man who put the tournament together. "First, it truly tests the top four to prove they are the top four before prize money is dished out. Second, the winner-take-all matches each round will heighten the interest."

Players will be selected from the top 16 ranked professionals and the tournament is sanctioned by the National Racquetball Club, with the official ball the same as on the pro tour—the Seamco 559.

One of the highlights of the tournament will be the appearance of Mr. Kunnan Lo, who will personally present the prize money awards in the championship matches.

"It's going to be a superb event," said Drake. "Another important factor is that it is the last tournament prior to the Nationals, so all the players will be at their best."

Age Clarification Made For National Juniors

Due to the increasing number of inquiries the USRA has announced that all players who qualify for the National Juniors championships will participate in the age category in which they played the Regional championships.

This means that if a player won a trip at any USRA Regional, or if a player receives an at-large invitation, he or she will be eligible for the Nationals in the age category that was correct in the Regionals.

"A number of players will advance beyond their age group in the time between the Regionals and Nationals," said Terry Fancher, USRA national coordinator. "We don't want to be in a position of taking free trips away from the kids because of scheduling difficulties."

Any player who is not sure of his or her age category is encouraged to call Terry Fancher at USRA headquarters. The Nationals, which will be Aug. 1-6 at King of Prussia Racquetball Club in suburban Philadelphia, will play host to the top 80 junior racquetball players in the nation.

"We're looking forward to the tournament as the highlight of our season," said owner Jim Pruitt. "We think the Juniors are going to have a ball."

Further information, including hotel arrangements will be announced in upcoming issues of National Racquetball.
Building a Low-Cost Club

Dear Mr. Leve:

I, like many thousands of others, have become infected by racquetball. I have played many, many sports, but have found none the equal of racquetball for competition, exercise, relief from tension or just plain fun.

My problem is that racquetball is becoming a city sport and primarily a large city sport. I have to drive 50 miles to Louisville or 75 to Cincinnati to play. I feel that for the sport to become more recognizable, it must become available to all the people.

Let me throw this idea at you for your comments and perhaps help in getting it started.

I'm proposing that in small towns such as ours, a very spartan facility could be built from a concrete block building, with poured concrete (painted) flooring. A composition front wall would be installed, but the other three walls would be plain concrete block. The ceiling would be ¾" plywood with recessed lights. For "frills," we would have men and women's lockers with showers; again very spartan. From very preliminary cost estimates, a four court facility could be built for about $50,000 (land not included) — a long way from the cost of present facilities.

My membership plan is very simple in that I sell all members a key to the facility for $25.00. For the key, they must guarantee me one hour of play per month. There would generally be no employees at the facility and the lights would be coin operated (6.00/hr.-prime, 4.00/hr. non-prime). The keys would be numbered to prevent play from non-members.

There are other details, but you have the basic concept. Now—is it being done like this anywhere else? Can you lend some assistance for inexpensive, but acceptable construction?

I certainly thank-you for your time and any help would certainly be appreciated.

Less Grab in Women’s Section, Please
Dear Sirs:
We all appreciate the expanded women’s section in your magazine. But would appreciate it more if it were geared to women and not men.

After a week of watching the male members of our club drool over Adrienne Barbeau and your Miss America “Hopeful” I feel you need to know that warmups cut to the navel, satin gym shorts and girls with big boobs are great for the guys, but hold little interest for women. Your instructional tips and coverage of the pros are great, but, please, skip the frills.

Andrea Ray,
Overland Park, KS

The fact that the male members of your club found—in the same issue—two women to drool over was a coincidence. Adrienne Barbeau and Susan Holman’s grab-inspiring appearances are secondary to the reasons they were featured in our January issue. Adrienne was part of a series on well-known people playing racquetball. (Celebrity players include Actor Dustin Hoffman, Pulitzer Prize Winning Author Saul Bellow and other men and women we hope to feature in the future.) Adrienne was not a part of the Women in Racquetball section but Susan was. Susan also was part of another series—this one on interesting women who play and love racquetball. That’s the only criterion for our Who’s Playing Racquetball? series, which also has described the jobs and racquetball games of a sheriff, a nuclear scientist, a nurse, a lawyer and a college professor. — ED.

Where to Get Inside
Dear Gentlemen:
I just received the book, Inside Racquetball for Women, you kindly sent me. I have read through the whole thing and I feel it will be an excellent teaching aid to all women racquetball players learning the game. Jean Sauser and Arthur Shay did an excellent job putting it together. I’m sure I’ll be able to use the ideas from this book to improve my ladies clinic leagues here at Santana Courts. Thanks again for sending the book.

Ruth Knudsen McGovern
Santa Ana, CA

P.S. I’ve had several ladies express an interest in obtaining this book. I would appreciate some information on where it may be purchased or ordered. Thank you!

Contemporary Books, the publisher, has distributed Inside Racquetball to bookstores and court clubs around the country. You also can order the book by sending $4.95 plus 35 cents for shipping and mailing (and sales tax—5 per cent in California, 5 per cent in Illinois) to Contemporary Books, 180 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, IL 60601, Attention: Karen Maki. The hardcover sells for $7.95, and would cost more for shipping and mailing. Write to Karen for prices on more than one copy. — ED.

“Raggedball” Story Gets Onions...
Dear Editor:
I am saddened to see the trend developing in your magazine concerning the projected image of racquetball. As a player who is striving to appear to be struggling like a child with an identity crisis. You compare it to other established sports which were developed, played, and promoted by upper middle class interests. Racquetball is not tennis, it is not golf, it is its own unique sport. It does not have the elitist atmosphere of these sports, it is a common man’s sport.

Is it that important to the growth of this game that we “Raggedballers” don’t wear Cardin clothes, carry Gucci bags or wear the most expensive shoes? One of the joys of beginning racquetball is not having to make an outlandish investment in acceptable apparel. As a person becomes more involved with the sport, they seem to naturally develop better clothing habits. Instead of trying to force these changes, let racquetball develop at its own pace. As more people take an interest in appearance, peer pressure will bring about these changes.

Please, in fairness to this great, but young, sport let it grow up from childhood to adulthood without the parental insistence that the sport act like an adult.

Chas Prior
Richardson, TX

Dear Sirs:
I’m writing in regard to the article by James H. Rutz entitled “Welcome to Raggedball.” I work at the King’s Court Racquetball Club in Roseville and I have the opportunity to view a whole barrage of sportswear. I must admit that some of the outfits aren’t too becoming or even flattering to the participants who wear them; however racquetball is not a style show. It’s a game of fun and exercise that is enjoyed by all, not just the wealthy.

My quarrel with the article is that I feel one of the reasons tennis might be dwindling is because no one except the high class mucky-mucks can afford the stylish attire of the game. If being in the latest fashion and dazzling your opponent with a spectacular color coordinated garment is what racquetball is all about, then people might as well dress in their Easter Sunday apparel and play parlor games in the Oval Room.

Meg Sander
St. Paul, MN

To Chuck Leve, James H. Rutz, et al:
I don’t really expect your ego to tolerate the publication of this letter, but I’m sending it at any rate because it needs to be said. You, and those who think similarly, are making a profound mistake which could easily send racquetball sliding down the very same skids which tennis has so well grease’d for itself. Specifically I’m talking about your lemming-like, “fashion-conscious” beratement of those who choose to not dress up in Gucci shoes or Yves St. Laurent shorts simply to exercise, have fun and otherwise work up a good sweat and sink.

This may be too low class for you, but I, and many like me, do not choose to feed my ego by resorting to one-upmanship or snobbery in this manner. My abilities on the court should speak for themselves. To resort to outdoing one’s opponent or someone else is to detract from one of the greatest attractions racquetball has.

Fashion usually sacrifices function and I prefer function. Very infrequently do I see women in dresses. Normally they wear apparel like the men’s, namely the old standby athletic shirt. It may not be fashionable, but it sure is functional. Now that women are growing more aware that they need not fall into the stereotypical trap of being “ladylike” to be feminine, they are starting to relax, grow more fully human and pay less attention to what others think is fashionable.

If you think racquetball needs to become fashionable to gain more respect, more sponsorship and a marketable image, think again. Racquetball does not need an image like tennis. It does not need to even compare itself with that sport. It needs its own image. Unless those like you ruin it, it lacks the snobbishness, the fashionable uprightness, the elitism that sports like tennis exude. Just why do you think sports like football, baseball and basketball are so popular? Do you think it is because their players are more fashionable? Not quite. It is because they attract the greatest number, the casual middle class. If you’d rather be fashionable while exercising, go play tennis or golf.

Thomas M. Lester
Bethesda, MD

Dear Mr. Rutz:
You are an impressive writer, enjoyable to read, and I am touched by your concern for the “image” of racquetball players. However you entirely miss the purpose of racquetball by begrudging the admittedly less-than-perfect attire of its participants.

Racquetball was, and is, intended to be a fun sport, offering health and enjoyment to those who may not appreciate the frivolous fashion show of modern tennis. True, faded sweat shirts and cut off shorts are inappropriate for television coverage, but how many times do either of us appear on TV? That is certainly the exception rather than the rule.

Let’s leave the Pierre Cardin set at Wimbledon and concentrate on developing our skills at this fascinating, informal game. Most of all let’s have a good time, knowing that our opponents are sizing up our service and not merely the price tag on our shorts.

P.S. Skateboarders have feelings too!

National Racquetball
... And Orchids

Dear Mr. Kendler:

I'd like to compliment Jim Rutz on the feature article in January's issue "Welcome to Raggedball."

It has long been my feeling that bad manners in competition has been allowed to go too far. It spoils the name of the sport, takes away from the well-behaved opponent and belittles the true athletic ability of its beholder.

Although there could be more emphasis in the rules to keep poor manners in check, I feel in any sport it is the responsibility of the official to enforce control of the participants' and spectators.

As far as clothes are concerned, they don't make the person, but appearance has an effect on mannerisms.

Let's take athletics away from the animals by giving respect, dignity and courtesy to all involved.

Shirley Holstad
Tillamook, OR

Dear Mr. Rutz:

I was delighted to read where National Racquetball was becoming a monthly publication. I have always looked forward to receiving the new issues.

I have been exposed to the racquetball atmosphere for less than a year and I must confess that the pleasan,t wholesome athletic atmosphere really convinced me that this is a family sport, one in which I have no fears of including my family and friends.

Your article in the January, 1978 edition of National Racquetball is very well taken. Racquetball has no place for shabbily dressed, provocatively dressed, boozed up or swearing individuals. Admitting such will destroy the class associated with this great sport.

Greetings:

Please convey to Jim Rutz a revelation of a severe lack of knowledge in his article, "Welcome to Raggedball." Most of the article was great. So great I’ll wash my socks. However I am appalled by his implication that wrestling is low brow. Surely he is aware that there is a vast, vast difference in real wrestling and what is called wrestling on television. Intercollege Folkstyle and international Freestyle wrestling are as varied as chess, though considerably more strenuous and are a beautiful combination of artistry, strategy and physical conditioning. "Pro Rasslin" is a show, classified loosely as entertainment by some, which bears little resemblance to any real sport. Again, however, let me say that I agree wholeheartedly with all the rest of the article. Continue to do your usual great job with the magazine.

Reach For The Stars . . .

Or maybe that should read, "The Stars Reach For Racquetball." The truth is that more and more Hollywood celebrities are taking up racquetball to keep themselves in shape for their acting roles.

The more we delve into the world of stardom, the more we find the beautiful people taking up racquetball. The excellent health benefits, coupled with the emotional release that accompanies a good workout, provides ample reason for taking up the sport.

"A week doesn't pass that I don't hear about another celebrity playing racquetball," said Nick Longhurst, our west coast editor and writer of the Barbeau article.

"In fact," says Nick, "many of them are getting into the club business, as well."

Wayne Rogers, another well-known actor, who graced the pages of National Racquetball (September, 1977), is an investor in a chain of west coast facilities. We now hear that Donny and Marie Osmond are building a club in Utah and other stars are seriously looking at racquetball from the business as well as playful aspects.

Aside from the fact that motion picture and television personalities give us good reason to periodically have famous faces on the cover of National Racquetball, the upswing in celebrity racquetball holds significance more importance to the sport in general.

Primarily the celebrities (some more for instances are Lee Majors, Al Pacino, James Caan, David Janssen and Dustin Hoffman) give racquetball instant credibility, or at least additional credibility.

We sometimes tend to forget that the New York-based national media haven't got the word yet as to racquetball's past and impending popularity, mainly because New York seems to be the last virgin racquetball area. It's another case of since they don't know too much about it, it couldn't be very important.

But when the stars do it, it becomes important because it becomes a potentially profitable promotion in one way or another. Celebrities help shape many of the social habits of this country — tennis being the most recent example.

The fact that these celebrities are not only playing racquetball, but also are investing in racquetball, adds further to the credibility of the sport. In today's age of business agents and financial advisors for all celebrities it can be assumed that their investment in racquetball comes after some extensive research.

The next step logically seems to be a celebrity or pro/celebrity tournament of sorts. Don't be surprised if news of such an event is forthcoming in these pages.

The celebrity world can do much to enhance the growth of racquetball. The gospel will be spread much faster as a result of celebrity participation. More people will be exposed to racquetball, just to see what the celebrities are doing.

And it's not a ruse. The facts are that well known celebrities (sports and politics as well as actors and actresses) are joining the ranks of racquetballers.

Nobody has pressured any celebrity to play the game. Racquetball has attracted celebrities for the same reason it draws all of us — because of the healthful benefits to be derived. And that's the way it should be.
The National Racquetball Club made the choice. Yes, the pro's selected Champion's Model 610 as the "official glove" because of design and superior performance. Soft, thin deerskin palm . . . double thickness terry cloth back, wrap-around Velcro wrist strap, Helenca stretch design . . . are all preferred features. That's why amateur, as well as professional, racquetball players like the Champion Model 610 glove. At your YMCA, Racquetball Club or Sporting Goods Dealer.
A lot of women will take us to court because of this.

Racquetball is the fastest growing sport in the world. And an estimated 40% of the players are women.

Yet no one has come up with a glass-filled racquet designed especially for them.

Until now.
Leach introduces the Lady Swinger, the sport's first glass-filled racquet for women.

The Lady Swinger is a racquet dedicated to the proposition that women are every bit as serious on the court as men.

It's a natural competitor. We've modified the basic teardrop shape to turn the entire string area into one big sweet spot, for more accuracy.

It weighs in at under 250 grams, making it easier to swing.

And the Lady Swinger's narrow-throat design and comfortable 4" grip put a stop to rotational torque on occasional miss-hits around the edge. So it's easier to control.

It's a superb price competitor too, with a suggested retail under $20.00.

That's right. The first women's racquet for under $20.00.

And backed by a full one-year guarantee covering both strings and frame.

The Lady Swinger. It's a great new racquet from the company amateurs and pros alike have been taking to court for years. And winning with.

We rest our case.
